On Friday afternoon there will be a special workshop on Central America. The session on Sunday morning will feature a panel of religious leaders on the question of "A Moral Position on the Arms Race."

Most of the Institute participants come from a distance and will live at the college. But residents of the area are welcome as full participants for a registration fee of $10. More detailed information about the program can be secured through the office of Al Holtz at Warren Wilson College at 298-3325.

This long-established Institute is under the auspices of the American Freedom Association. Co-sponsors are the American Friends, the United Nations Association, and other organizations. The president of the local United Nations Association chapter is Dr. Hugo Thompson of Black Mountain,

Riddle to be News intern

Tim Riddle will be doing his journalism internship with the Black Mountain News. He will handle a number of varied assignments during the time he will spend working for the community paper in order to gain as He transferred to the University of North Carolina at Asheville in the spring of 1982. He is now majoring in Communications there. He joined the staff of its student weekly bewspaper, Kaleidoscope, at its inception in the fall of 1982, working first as a sports writer, then as sports editor. He will be the editor of the paper this fall. He has also worked part time with the Ashevill-Citizen as a sports correspondent. He plans a career in journalism, "hopefully beyond the reporting level." Riddle is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Riddle of Black Mountain where he has made his home for the past eight years.

Sixth Annual "Sourwood" Sourwood Festival to be August 5-6

Plans are underway in Black Mountain for the Sixth Annual Sourwood Festival scheduled to take place on Friday and Saturday, Aug. 5 and 6.

The downtown streets will be the setting for festive fair booths selling foods, drinks and other items of interest. Musical entertainment and dancing are also planned. The Swannanoa Valley Art League will open its annual show just prior to the festival on Sunday, July 31, with a tea at the library.

A number of sports events will also be taking place in the week preceeding the festival as well as on the fifth and sixth. Competitions in softball, golf and tennis and a road race are scheduled.

The Old Depot Association will sponsor craft demonstrations, an author's autograph party and a variety of musical presentations at the Depot. The highlight of the weekend's activities may well be the parade. Kathy W acaster is the co-ordinator and has asked that those who wish to participate contact her at 669-6132. She said that there was no particular theme this year and that originality in floats and other units would make the event fun for all who take part. The parade will begin at 10:30 a.m.

The parade will form on North Dougherty Street, turn east on State, turn south on Broadway, east on Sutton, north on Richardson Blvd. and disband in the parking lot of the Black Mountain News.

For further information, contact the Black Mountain-Swannanoa Chamber of Commerce at 669-2300 or Mike Sobol, festival chairman.

Cattlemen to meet

The North Carolina Cattleman's Association will meet at Warren Wilson College Saturday, July 30, starting at 1 p.m. The group of 300 to 400 cattlemen will tour the Swannanoa campus to view agricultural projects underway there and will hear a number of speakers.

Ernst Laursen, Warren Wilson Farm Manager, will begin the farm tour with a look at the cattle and some innovative methods in use at WWC including the use of special ear sags that keep flies off the cattle, implants in the ear to stimulate growth, and the use of an antibiotic to stimulate growth. The group will tour the college's new cattle working facilities, and will view some experimental crops that are being grown on the 300 acre farm. A visit to the pig farm and the sawmill are also planned.

The afternoon's presentations will be nade on cow-calf management, andling stocker cattle and forage crop nanagement. Speakers will include Dr. Ienry W. Webster, specialist in charge f animal husbandry at Clemson Uniersity; Dr. James. T. Green, extension prage specialist at the N.C. State iniversity; Beecher C. Allison, area livestock extension specialist (WNC); and Clint M. Reeves, executive secretary, N.C. Cattlemen's Association.

The day's activities conclude with a dinner in the college cafeteria at 6:45 p.m. This is being provided by FCX, Inc. and Western Carolina Livestock Market, along with Farm Credit Service of Asheville, Cutter Animal Health, Elanco Products, American Cyanamid, International Minerals and Chemicals, Anchor Laboratories and Merck and Company, Inc. Morris L. McGough, executive vice president of the WNC Development Association will be master of ceremonies.

Further information on the field day may be obtained from the agricultural extension office in each county. Buncombe * County's agent is Kenneth Reeves and he can be reached at 255-5522.

Warren Wilson College is a four-year liberal arts college where all resident students participate in the Work Program, working fifteen hours a week in exchange for room and board. There are 30 to 40 students on the farm crew every year who help maintain and run the entire operation.

Dr. Lane joins staff at animal hospital

Patricia L. Lane, DVM, has joined the staff of the Blue Ridge Animal Hospital on West State Street in Black Mountain. A native of Georgia, she graduated from the University of Georgia at Athens. While an undergraduate, she was a member of Phi Beta Kappa and other honorary fraternities. She is a graduate of the Veterinary School of Medicine at the University.

Dr. Lane has been practicing for three years in Brunswick, Ga. and in nearby St. Simons Island. She was associated with two clinics there.

But she and her husband, who is an ecologist she met while he was working on his Phd. in Athens, decided that they had gotten "tired of the bugs and lowlands" and decided to re-locate in the mountains.

Correction

There were two errors in the cutline that appeared under the picture of the building at the shore of Lake Susan in the July 14 edition of the Black Mountain News: The building is owned by the Montreat Conference Center, not Montreat-Anderson College as stated. However, it is used as a collegiate center.

Also, although the building appears to be three-storied in the photo, it is only two-storied. Dr. Lane "has always had animals" and jokingly said that she knew the only way she could afford a lifetime of vet bills to care for her menagerie, she decided, was to become a veterinarian herself!

Her father always liked animals and brought exotic animals home to the farm where she grew up. In addition to horses, cows and other domesticated animals, there was frequently an exotic animal such as an ocelot about.

Right now she and her husband own seven horses, five Nubian goats, and assorted dogs. They are looking for a small farm of 10-20 acres that is near enough to Black Mountain to enable her to reach the clinic quickly in case of emergency.

Dr. Wagener specializes in small animals and Dr. Lane would like to make her specialty large animals.

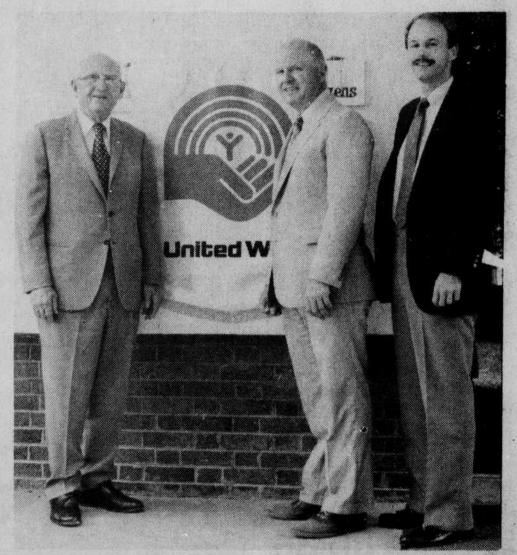

Planning Board

to meet

The Planning Board will meet on Monday, July 25, at 7 p.m., according to the new chairman of the board, Joe Tyson.

The Board will meet in the Town Hall and the public is invited. The Board will continue to work on the proposed sub-division ordinances. much practical experience as possible in a limited amount of time. He will be writing the Police and Fire Reports on a regular basis. A feature article a week will appear under his byline and he will be covering the monthly meeting of the town's planning board.
