THE OPTOMETRIST HAS TO BE A SPECIALIST—NO MAN CAN FULLY KNOW THE EYE AND HAVE TIME FOR MUCH ELSE!

And an optician who is alive to the vast importance of his work in the world will become a SPECIALIST by force of logic. His study of the eye—of its ailments; of how to remedy eye-ills and to keep the greatest human faculty unimpaired—demands all of his time, his talents and his enthusiasm.

HOW ABOUT YOUR EYES?

Shut the Gate

There are some people coming to the Dr. Sloan Spring that leave the gate open. Unless that is stopped at once the gate will be kept locked. It is up to the people of New Bern to take notice. The person that is caught leaving the gate open will be forbidden taking water from the Spring. Cattle have been let into my fields, and it is becoming quite an annoyance to look out for our gates. This is fair warning to all.

DR. EARL S SLOAN.

Fashion's Latest Whims

Fine Gingham Combined With Silks in Summer Suits—Draperies in Afternoon Frocks

New York, May 5. To keep apace with Fashion, one must be ever on the alert in these days when there is constantly something new appearing. We do not look for any change in the silhouette, for that has been finally settled, at least for the coming season, but there are countless important minor details always turning up which make the game of keeping up with the mode a very interesting one. Almost each day something new is brought to the attention; a certain material suddenly rises into prominence, a new way of draping a skirt is devised, and sundry novel accessories appear upon the scenes and are quickly taken up with enthusiasm.

which has the collar and cuffs, and sometimes, pockets, of gingham. A surprising combination, but distinctly effective when one gets used to the ideal. In other instances, plaid and plain gingham are used to make the popular middie dresses with slip-over blouses and plaited skirts. With the plaid used for the skirt and to trim the blouse, a dress of this kind is exceedingly attractive for summer wear. Gingham is crisp and cool and may always be kept looking fresh.

The separate skirt of plaid or checked gingham, to wear with white voile and batiste waists, is also a pleasing novelty for summer. The skirts are sometimes made with belts of silk in some bright color matching one of the colors in the plaid or stripes as the case may be. Smart gingham blouses are trimmed with white pique collars and cuffs, and buttonholes bound with the pique.

The new blouses that look like coats keep rising in popularity. They are especially smart in costumes of jersey cloth. A very attractive model in plain and checked jersey is shown in the sketch, and with it is worn one of the fancy girdles that are all the rage just now. These new girdles

Draped Styles are again in Vogue.

In opposition to the frocks that are absolutely straight line, there are many ways of draping skirts to give that slight puffiness about the hips which is now one of the accepted modes in the dressier type of frock for afternoon and evening wear. One of the latest ways is by gathering the straight lower section of a skirt to a yoke, and leaving the sides free to form looped draperies which fall very gracefully into position when the soft pliable materials are used. An illustration of this charming style is shown in the sketch. The dress is of pongee trimmed with narrow bands of ribbon. The waist of this costume is made with kimono sleeves of the loose, baggy type, the kind that were in fashion some time ago. The unusual V-shaped collar and flaring cuffs add the note of distinction which all such simple styles require.

Sometimes long, straight tunics or apron effects take the place of draperies in frocks of silk, chiffon or Georgette. A beautiful dress of white satin for a bride was made with a long pleated apron of fine white net edged with white glass beads. The transparent glass beads are now being used for the bead work, which is strongly in evidence.

Ginghams for Summer Suits and Dresses

Bright, colorful gingham in very fine qualities have risen into prominence and are used in fashioning not only separate blouses and skirts, but also entire summer dresses and suits. In making suits, the latest fad has been to combine gingham with pongee and other sports silks. A skirt of gingham is used with a silk coat are of metal and celluloid, and some in a variety of colors. Very pretty are those of colored stones with oxidized silver or gilt chains. Others are made of squares or circles of jade, jet, amber or ebony, linked with metal chains. Girdles of this kind are used with coats as well as with dresses.

Vests Appear in Suits

Some of the new turtur summer suits are trimmed with silk fringes around the edges of the coats. Silk fringes are also used to finish the narrow silk or cloth girdles with which most frocks are provided.

Vests seem to be an important part of the newest suits. White silk or serge suits are frequently made with vests of bright colored satins, or the embroidered Oriental silks. In the woolen suits, collars and vests are made of broadcloth, striped silk or of natural-colored pongee. Sometimes the vests are embroidered, and again, the edges are bound with braid, to give a neat, tailored finish. Detachable collars of blue and white striped cottons on dark blue serge and twill suits have also been noticed as well as those of silk.
