Out of the Final Contest.

The old gentleman was a trifle bewildered at the elaborate wedding.

"Are you the groom?" he asked a melancholy looking man.

"No, sir," the young man replied. "I was eliminated in the preliminary try-outs."

HAIR.

Baltimore Evening Sun.

A certain man who has had much to do with race horses is quoted in the public prints as saying that he judges the fighting quality of a horse or a man by the presence or absence of coarse hair near the eyes. This may or may not be a good system; but as to the relationship between hair and a fighting spirit, any man may judge for himself by observing his acquaintances.

Consider the man whose head is covered with a heavy thatch of black bristles and whose face remains blue after the barber has done his best. There is a scrapper. He may not be quarrelsome, and prudence may send him on his way when the odds are too heavy; but anybody who desires a few minutes of concentrated trouble may obtain it by kicking this individual on the shins.

The well-haired chap whose thatch is yellow or tinged with red is a first-class fighting man, also, and dearly loves to mix it; but he fights coolly and cheerfully and without rage. True, he may have a temper that is set on a hair trigger, but temper is a flash in the pan while rage is a consuming fire.

Now observe the gentleman whose soft locks of whatever hue have fallen by the wayside. He may fight well if fight he must, but he is a lover of peace and no crusader. He employs a soft answer more frequently than his fists.

Here, then, is the making of a pretty theory. When man ran wild and wore few garments he had need of considerable hair to protect him from the weather. Nature provided the hair. As civilization exerted its softening influence and more garments made their appearance, man was denuded of his foliage.

The bald and those possessed of soft locks are not more civilized than their brethren; but they have been more affected by civilization and retain less of the ferocity that was essential to longevity in an earlier day.

If this is a good theory, we need not expect the beginning of everlasting peace until everybody is bald—and that, as every hair tonic addict will agree, is a great price to pay for peace.

TEN POINTS TO SUCCESS.

Marshall Field, greatest merchant in point of accumulation of property in the United States, and perhaps the greatest in the world, said there were ten things he kept constantly in mind:

- The value of time.
- The success of perseverance.
- The pleasure of working.
- The worth of character.
- The dignity of simplicity.
- The joy of originating.
- The improvement of talent.
- The virtue of patience.
- The wisdom of economy.
- And the power of kindness.

Marshall Field remembered these things and he succeeded in the things he sought. — Exchange.
