

HOW DOCTORS TREAT COLDS AND THE FLU

To break up a cold over night or to cut short an attack of grippe, influenza or sore throat, physicians and druggists are now recommending Calatob, the nasealese Calomel tablet, that is purified from danger and sickening effects. Those who have tried it say that it acts like magic, by far more efficacious and certain than the old style calomel, heretofore recommended by physicians.

Those Who Do Not Make The Front Page

(Dr. J. W. Holland, in Progressive Farmer.) The newspapers want front page stuff. They search with microscopic eyes for it. No matter how little may be in the other pages of the paper, the front page must allure the curiosity of paper buyers. I want to tell you how to get on the front page. Kill somebody. Get mad or insanely jealous, and shoot or cut some one down. That will get you a long lettered headline on the front page. They will secure, by stealth, if necessary, your baby pictures, and show your growth from tender innocence to gorilla like fiend. Slap your wife in the mouth instead of kissing her. A woman can kiss her husband every morning for 40 years, and it is not a tale for the papers, but just let her kiss "another man" once and that is front-page material. Swindle unsuspecting and trust-worthy people out of their savings, buy your way into congress, steal a railroad or a coal field, and the camera man from the newspaper office will camp on your doorstep. There are good people, as well as bad on the front page. Do something exceptional in the way of goodness, shield some defenseless girl who has taken a wrong step, put on a charity ball for orphans, and the front page will display it. Of course, there has to be a front page to a paper, but it is well to remember that the greatest events of the world, and most of the really great people do not get there, but receive the three scant notes among the back-pieces, birth, marriage, death. Real worth does not need to be photographed. A work horse is a very common thing, but the world must have him. Jesus saw deeper into human motives than any man who has ever walked this planet. He watched conspicuous goodness making a parade of alms giving, and saying high sounding prayers in public and He also saw a poor broken hearted widow slip into the temple, and cast her last penny into her Lord's treasury, Jesus said, "The woman hath done more than you all." So, I say, prayers on the heads and blessings on the hearts of the great army of folk who live in the fear of God, decently and in honor, on the back roads and side alleys of the world. Blessings on the fathers and mothers who wear patched clothing that John and Mary may have a chance. They help weave the fabric of a better world. Blessings on preachers, whom the Lord keeps humble, and the people keep poor, but who breathe forth their best in unknown and unseen places. Blessings on school teachers, who are not known beyond the district where they live, but who pour out into other lives the inspiration of genius. Blessings on every hand that lifts, every heart that cares and keeps pure by the mercy of God, every back that bears the burdens that love places on honorable shoulders. They are the saviors of human society. Their names may not appear on the front page of the daily papers, but I believe that the engraving angels of God will write their luminous names in the Lamb's Book of Life.

Worn Out Caring for Children and Housework—See how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helps

Indianapolis, Indiana.—"I was in a very nervous and run-down condition while nursing my baby, and bearing some talk of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I began taking it. From the second bottle I noticed a big improvement, and I am still taking it. I am not a bit nervous now, and feel like a different person. It is a great medicine for any one in a nervous, run-down condition and I would be glad to give any one advice about taking it. I think there is no better medicine and give you permission to publish this letter."—Mrs. ANNA SMITH, 541 W. Norwood Street, Indianapolis, Indiana. The important thing about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is that it does help women suffering from the ailments common to their sex. Stage Set for Last Act

By JANE OSBORN (Copyright.)

ROBERT TERRY sometimes felt that his position was intolerable. Judith Blackstone had told him frankly that she loved him when he asked her to marry him. That was last May—and then she had dashed off with her sister-in-law, Daphne, to their summer home on the side of Dale mountain, to be gone for months, telling him definitely that there must be no exchange of letters between them. "If we were engaged in the regular way we'd be good for nothing else all summer but writing everlasting daily letters and worrying when letters didn't come on time," Judith had said. "So don't write and then when you have your vacation the first of September you may come up to Dale mountain and we can talk of a definite engagement then." At the beginning of the warm weather it had been definitely agreed that Robert should have no vacation until September, but by the close of July he found himself in such a state of anxiety, because of his inability to hear from Judith, that he decided that some what might, he would take a week off from his work and go to her. About all that Robert Terry knew of Judith's arrangements on Dale mountain was that she and her widowed sister-in-law lived together in a cabin some quarter mile off from the club lodge where they and the other members of the club had their meals together. Robert Terry dispatched a letter, of the briefest sort, to tell Judith that he was coming. Judith promptly telegraphed back: "Don't come now. Much preoccupied." The result of this telegram was that Robert Terry took the first train he could catch that carried him in the direction of Dale mountain. He was ready to fight the most formidable of rivals on the strength of the vivid recollection of Judith's simple, "Terry, I love you."

Twelve hours later Terry found himself in the nearest railroad station ten miles from the Dale mountain lodge. He arranged with the local garage man to motor him up the mountain road to the club encampment. It was nearing eight o'clock when Terry finally found his way to the Blackstone cottage. He stepped across the wide veranda to find the place obviously deserted for the time being. Robert Terry felt his courage mounting. Judith had said that she loved him. She had intimated that she would marry him. They were virtually engaged. Then, argued Terry going to the front door and trying the knob, since Judith had no brother she lived alone with a widowed sister-in-law, he was her rightful male protector. The door knob gave as he turned it vigorously. If she was "pre-occupied" it was his business to find out why. Thus concluding Robert Terry let himself into the cabin. He struck a match, found a candle on a rustic table and lighted it. He saw the outlines of the room—quite large and furnished in keeping with the rough-timbered interior. This room was in order but as Robert observed the adjoining room he was struck by the disorder of it. Two trunks, drawn away from the wall, were wide open, the trunk trays placed on the floor with dainty clothes, slippers, parasols, and hats strewn about. Quite clearly some one was making preparations for hasty departure. He recognized a rose-colored frock of Judith's. On a table was a tray containing a half-eaten sandwich and beside it—the sight of it sickened him—a large and mischievous looking revolver. Examining more closely he saw bits of torn paper about the floor, and an overturned chair. Obviously there had been some sort of struggle.

Cautiously Robert approached the revolver, about to see whether it was loaded or discharged, when he heard footsteps on the veranda, the turning of the knob and then light steps in the next room. Followed a cry of fright—it was Judith's voice. Robert breathed a prayer of thanksgiving. "Daphne," she called, "there's a light. Some one has been here." Robert Terry did what he considered the most considerate thing that he could under the circumstances. He coughed, gently but distinctly. Then he strode forward where the two women could see him. "I know you didn't want me to come," he said facing Judith and, as he did so, feeling the full intensity of his love for her. "I came anyway. I hope it isn't too late—" "But what's up?" asked Robert, waving an agitated hand in the direction of the open trunk, the scattered clothes and the revolver. Judith put two arms out and actually embraced Robert Terry, laughing as she did so. "You dear lamb, you," she said. "We're giving a play. I'm in it and it's going to be here tomorrow. We had a rehearsal here tonight and the stage was set for the last act. It's a thriller I can tell you. And I didn't want you to come until the next day because I was afraid I'd get stage fright if you saw me act. I'm the maid. I could have been leading lady, Bob dear, only the leading lady had to kiss the leading man, and—here Judith pressed a neat little kiss on the lips of the astonished Robert Terry—"I wouldn't think of kissing any one but my fiance."

IKES TALE

Deer Star Readers:

Hit haint so long off now no more till we will all git to vote again on one side or tuther, and this includes all the female women from Sal up to them what has their hair bobbed. I did think I'd try to git out and try to see everybody and ax 'em how they wuz agwine to vote, but I see now that I won't have time to see only just the sorter big fellers what wears store clothes and smokes around purty big when they git out in a crowd. I begged Sal like the dickens to git me three or four cigars tuther day when she wuz out at Charlie Wortman's store, but she passed me by on the other side like they did the wounded Samaritan long ago. Well just to tell the truth which is a thing I hardly ever do, I don't know how to vote to save my life this time—nor I didn't know how the last election and hit is likely tht I won't know how to vote in the years to come; but I'll blaze away and let my best if hit knocks the pillars clear from under the government and lets hit drift on out of sight like a fog bank! Sal sez hit is a hard matter to git light and information on these big questions any way you go at hit. She sez out will come some Democrat candidate and he'll git up and blow around fur an hour or so when hit wood have done just as well if he wood a riz and sed "Durn everybody that don't vote the Democrat ticket, like I do"—then sot back down. Then, she sez, in about a week along comes one of these here Republican fellers which you know the Bible always chasses with sinners and he will git up and holler and stamp and rip around till he gets out of breath and has to set down; when hit wood a done just as well if he had only have sed: "Plague take such a set of men, why don't you all vote the Republican ticket like I do and then there wood be no more trouble nor sorrow in the world atter that."

But the worst thing Sal sez that has ever happened at Casar since she can recollect is that that is a feller a running fur President from sumwhar out west whose name is LaFollette. She sez that if he ever gets past Lawndale and heads up this way that she wants sum of the folks down thar to send us a message by X-ray so as we can git all the dogs and children inside the house, fur hit won't do to take no risks, she sez. No, the election haint fur off no more now and we ought to be a making up our minds right now how to vote right. I allers vote according to the dictates of my conscience and I've took notice to the fact that my conscience has never been a very hard one to dictate to you will pardon me fur referring to the past in this connection. The next year atter I wuz 21 sum fellers come to my house one Sunday and told me I wuz old enough to vote now just as well as anybody could. I sez, yes, but I don't know much about voting. That's all right they sez we come to learn you how now while you're young. So he retched in his pocket and pulled out a new wool hat and 15 cents in money and they both just exactly fit me. On election day that year everybody noticed that I had on a new hat, but only two or three men in the crowd knowd that way down deep in my pocket wuz 15 cents in cash. That wuz a long time ago but my conscience is still obedient to my will and to the will of others, and more especially so jist on the eve of a general election. IKE.

C., after a visit of several days with his son Mr. S. A. Crisp. Mr. Darwin Dover of Charlotte was visiting in Grover Sunday.

We regret to lose her from our school and community.

Mr. Paul Gibbons of Monroe has been visiting his grandmother near Grover for the last several days. Mrs. Eliza Devine, who was hurt when struck by train No. 15 in Grover last Monday died at the hospital in Gastonia last Thursday from the effects of the accident and was buried in the Grover cemetery Friday afternoon the funeral being held from the Presbyterian church at 3 o'clock. Mrs. Devine was 70 years of age and had been a member of the church since her girlhood. She was survived by her husband and one daughter by a former marriage, Miss Carrie Bellamy of Cherryville, and one brother Mr. B. H. Haigwood of Winston-Salem. She became unconscious a few hours after the accident and never regained consciousness. We extend to the family our sympathy in this bereavement.

After a few doses, in little or no time I'm all right again." Thedford's Black-Draught is a purely vegetable liver medicine, used in America for over eighty years. It acts on the stomach, liver and bowels in a gentle, natural way, assisting digestion and relieving constipation. Sold everywhere. E-102

Our objection to a cut-rate barber shop is the rate is usually about two cents per minute. The successful bidder will be furnished with the opinion of Messrs. Storey, Thorndike, Palmer & Dodge, Attorneys of Boston, Massachusetts, and Messrs. Quinn, Hamrick & Harris, Attorneys of Rutherfordton, N. C., that the bonds are valid and binding obligations of the Town of Boiling Springs. The Town will furnish free of cost the bond forms. F. B. HAMRICK, Town Clerk.
