Laws Won't Make People Free. Muskogee (Okla.) Daily Phoenix. Pleading for a return to the ideal of individual freedom as proclaimed in the United States constitution, Dr. G. W. Dyer, of Vanderbilt university, discussed the present industrial condition before the chamber of commerce at noon yesterday. God and the fathers of the republic, he said, ordained freedom for all men. Conditions today, he said, are not the result of this freedom, but of blunders in exercising it. The industrial revolution and development of factories drew the population into cities, not because they had to come, but because they wanted to, he pointed out; and they stayed, not because they had to stay, but because they wanted to. Workers Are To Blame. Therefore labor itself is responsible for its own condition, in his opinion, but, in the usual manner of fools when they have gotten themselves into trouble, it shifts the blame, and calls capital guilty. "It was never so easy to make a living as it is today," he said, "but men are no longer satisfied to make a living. They demand every luxury, and at the same time they don't want to work. In their extravagant and unreasonable demands, they attack capital and Wall street. "They cry about being victims of conditions over which they have no control, dominated by a great monster, capital, who holds them slaves. "The fact is that capital is the slave; it's one function is to supply the wants of the people. The people are masters. Oysters And Socialism. "The only possible way to change conditions is to change the ideals of the people; this should be the function of churches and schools, but they certainly are not doing much about it." Labor, Dr. Dyer said, should be bought and sold in the open market as coal and grain are, subject only to the laws of supply, demand and competition, and not to legislation. Dr. Dyer attacked socialism—"The oyster is a socialist," he said, "and you can't tell whether he's dead or alive. God treated him as the socialists would have the government treat us—gave him a safe and beautiful house and said, 'Now I'll take every care of you—you just go ahead and improve your mind.' "I think He did it to show us the evils of socialism," Dyer said. American An Eagle. But the eagle, he said, teeming with power, force, and vitality, expresses American freedom. "You're free; don't look to congress or depend on the Women's club to take care of you." "And the struggle he makes for existence develops him as it develops the character of man," said Dr. Dyer. He pointed out that industry is leaving the regions burdened with restrictive legislation, especially Wisconsin and New England, and going into the southern and western states "which have not yet been victimized by demagogues." REPUBLICAN TOWN OF RUTHERFORD SEEKS CHARTER Raleigh Dispatch. Union Hill, Rutherford county corporation which desires to become a city again by resuming its charter, has made application to the state board for another charter. Union Hill is of course a Republican community. The word Union is alarmingly suggestive of Hamiltonian politics. There be Rutherford Democrats who do not like the idea of creating Republican towns. There are very few in the state and as towns grow they become fewer. But Union Hill wants to be a city. It implores the municipal board which has such Democratic members as William Tom Lee, chairman of the corporation commission on it. Mr. Lee never has made any conscious contribution to Republican welfare. This is the story which comes down out of the west. Union Hill wishes to be Union Hill again, to be made a city yet one time more. The Home Market for Pork. The hogs grown on most Southern farms have a market provided at stable prices or values. A pound of pork for home consumption has the same value whether the market price for hogs be 7 cents a pound or 14 cents. It has the same food value. In other words, there are no problems of marketing and prices, so far as the home meat supply is concerned, but there is an important problem of cost of production. The handling of the pigs farrowed this spring and the feed crops grown will largely determine the cost of the home meat supply for next season and these problems are the ones that must have attention now.—The Progressive Farmer.
