Thousands Express Love For Bryan As Death Train Passes

On Board Funeral Train, en Route to Washington, Bristol, Va., Tenn., July 29.—Kind hearts tonight kept watch above the body of William Jennings Bryan and loving hands ministered to the comfort of his widow as the train which bore the burdened casket of the stricken statesman moved out of Tennessee into Virginia on its journey to Washington says an Associated Press dispatch.

Between two far-flung cordons of protecting guards, believers in his God, his pathway lay today. Eyes upturned in quiet grief, hymns intoned by reverent lips, love expressed in simple forms sped the pilgrim home.

To National Capital.

Early on the morrow the funeral party with the body of the former cabinet head was expected to reach Washington, where his countrymen were ready to bestow last honors. In the national capital, where Mrs. Bryan and her daughter Mrs. Ruth Owen were to await the coming of the other daughter, Mrs. Grace Hargreaves, and her brother, William, jr., plans for the funeral on Friday and subsequent burial in Arlington cemetery had yet to be completed.

Mrs. Bryan, sitting upright near her husband's casket, was overwhelmed by the spontaneous outbursts of sympathy and love which men and women along many hundreds of miles on the Commoner's last journey repeatedly displayed.

Thousands Grieved.

In the small towns traversed by the mourning caravan, the inhabitants flocked to the track-side to show their interest at the passing of the Commoner. In many villages observers estimated the crowds exceeding the normal population. Induced to grant a view of her husband's face to the waiting throng at Knoxville, Mrs. Bryan here received many evidences of love and devotion for herself and for the departed statesman. A flowered Bible in heroic proportions was presented by the chamber of commerce. A ribboned inscription declared a favorite sentiment of the Christian spokesman: "I have enough religion to live by and die by."

BRYAN HELD TO THE BIBLE

"If the Bible states it; it is true," said William J. Bryan in answering the questions of Clarence Darrow at the evolution trial at Dayton, Tenn. Above Bryan is shown with his Bible on the platform erected for the outdoor session of the trial.

WOMEN TAKE SLAP AT 10-CENT STORE KING

S. S. KRESGE AND MRS. KRESGE.

SEBASTIAN S. KRESGE, millionaire 5 and 10-cent store magnate possesses all the wealth any woman might desire of a husband. He is but 58 years old, fairly young. If one may be considered of age as it applies to men.

But Sebastian Kresge is constitutionally and habitually unfit to make any young woman happy. This is the indictment of two young women, Mrs. Kresge and the former Mrs. Kresge.

The present Mrs. Kresge has brought suit against the millionaire merchant king, asking for $7,000,000 in stock she says he promised her before they were married.

She states in her complaint that Kresge called her a "gold digger," packed his luggage and left her with out even making provisions for her support.

And all of this just because she asked him when he was going to turn over the stock, she says.

Also, the present Mrs. Kresge declares that Kresge's fortune has been erected on the foundation of small economies, and that the spending ways of the modern woman appalls him.

Which may be an indictment of Kresge or an indictment of the modern young woman, depending upon the point of view.

The first Mrs. Kresge agrees with the second wife. She issued a statement saying that Kresge was "constitutionally and habitually unfit to be the husband of a young woman."

Kresge and his present wife were married in New York April 24, 1914.
