Did You Ever Think?
That when you see a misstatement in your local newspaper it is not necessarily evidence of stupidity, carelessness, malice or mendacity. No two witnesses of the same event ever see it from exactly the same angle, or even tell precisely the same story about it, even when testifying under oath in a court of law. Newspapers, no matter how carefully edited, are as liable to error as any other products of human inequity and labor. Reporters are seldom actual participants in the events which they chronicle. The news gatherers are obligated to obtain their information at second or third hand. They hear, and are sometimes obligated to attempt to reconcile conflicting statements. When the reporter has gathered his facts, they must pass successively through the hands of the copy reader, linetyper, proof reader, and corrector, each of whom is a possible source of error. To any man or woman who has become familiarized by long experience with the mechanical process of a newspaper and the personal factors that enable it to function, the wonder is, not that it makes so many mistakes, but that it makes so few.

The next time you detect an inaccuracy in a newspaper account of an event of which you have some knowledge, give the staff the benefit of the doubt. If it is a police item, visualize the policeman who gave the information. If it is a business item or a social item, ask yourself whether the reporters informant had a motive for conveying a false impression. It is not fair to the newspaper to convict it without a hearing. Why make the newspaper the goat?

Our idea of a liberal husband hails from New York city, where a man admitted giving his wife to his best friend.

"The Winning of Barbara Worth" with Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky is the special big feature at the Webb theatre today (Monday) and tomorrow. Claude Webb considered it an attraction worthy of two day showing. It is a picture made from the popular Harold Bell Wright book of the same title. It is said that the picture rights alone cost the producers one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. Further considering the fact that the scenario was prepared by Frances Marion, and the setting elaborate, the cast some of the best stars in the business, the picture is one of the most expensive ever shown here.

Tonight (Monday) the world's champion cowboy—Yakima Canutt in "The Iron Rider" will be at the Princess. It is a spectacular picture, telling the story in stirring action of a thundering episode of the Western frontier. My irons are in the fire, I'm red hot and ready for action," says Yakima. A good vaudeville program is advertised to accompany the pictures both tonight and tomorrow night. If you love action in a picture—thrill dare-devilry—don't fail to see the wonderful "Iron Rider." Coming tomorrow "Too Many Crooks"—Fox News and comedy—plus vaudeville.

CARRIES SECRET BITTERNES TO RESTING PLACE

Bryson City.—Fred Fischer, 70 years old, for many years known as one of the most brilliant attorneys in Western North Carolina, who died a week ago at his home near here, ordered a friend to dig his grave beside that of his first wife two days before his death, it was learned today. Apparently embittered by some early experience, Mr. Fischer had been known as an eccentric as well as a brilliant attorney. The only friend he ever accepted in this section died years ago, and since that time he never had spoken to persons outside his family, except to go to the railway station occasionally to inquire for the correct time. To speak of him on the street brought no response. Mr. Fischer was a member of a prominent old Salisbury family and a brother of the late Christian Reid noted writer.

GOLD DIGGER IN NEWSBOY MISSING

The Old "Mister Please Buy A Paper So I can Go Home" Disappears.

Raleigh Times.

The Tar Heel "Newsie" is not what he used to be. Infrequent is the old plea of ragged urchins with a soiled bundle of papers: "Mister, please buy a paper so I can go home," and then after the kind hearted editor had been touched: "Please let me keep the change, Mister."

In seven of the large cities of North Carolina the begging urchin is gone from the street trade. Plans are under way to curb him in smaller cities. Business of selling papers is being regulated by the state.

The work is being done under the direction of the state child welfare commission, of which E. F. Carter is the executive secretary. The law covering regulation of children engaged in street trades was passed by the legislature in the special session of 1924 but the child welfare commission had been studying the situation since 1922.

Now, in the seven cities where the trade is regulated, a boy to sell papers must get a badge from the welfare officer in charge of the district in which he lives. He must wear it conspicuously, thus giving police an easy way to keep unlicensed children from engaging in street trades. Children between 14 and 16 are eligible to sell papers between the hours of six a. m. and seven p. m., but children under 14 and over 12 can sell them only outside of school hours. Under 12, they cannot engage in street trades under the North Carolina law.

Mr. Carter said the plan was working out beautifully in the seven cities it is in operation and that in Raleigh 57 boys had been licensed for street trade, nine in Durham, 47 in Winston-Salem, 65 in Charlotte, 23 in High Point, 44 in Greensboro, and 15 in Asheville. He said that a prominent juvenile judge had told him that he recognized the regulatory work of the commissions as one of the greatest deterrents to street begging and juvenile delinquency. "Until recent years very little thought was given to children engaged in street trade," Mr. Carter said. "Many worthy children suffered by comparison with the large number of delinquents in the business. It is to eliminate the bad elements that the commission is directing its effects."

Saved After 15 Hours

New York—After relays of doctors and men had worked over him for 15 hours with a pump and an inhalator, William C. Meve, who was found unconscious from illuminating gas was revived. Sixteen tanks of oxygen and a blood transfusion were used to keep the small spark of life alive.

To My Son.
(By A. G. M. Campbell)
I have no wealth to leave you no fame.
This must be your inheritance name.

It has not been my fate, in sharp struggles,
To win the honors other man won.
Mine has not been a life of achievements;
I have not done the deeds some have done.
But I have kept unsullied and untarnished
That thing—a name—entrusted to my care;
I have not let dishonor dim my lustre,
Nor have I let shame leave its mark there.
I have not let my name be dimmed with malice,
Nor fear, nor moral cowardly greed,
Nor bigoted intolerance to others,
Nor lack of charity for the need.

But I have made, instead, my synonymous,
In all men's minds, with things most worthwhile:
With strength to do the things though none might see,
With grit to meet disaster with a smile;

With loyalty to those with whom I have dealt;
With justice equally toward friend and foe;
With honor, truth, integrity, and a dealing—
"My word my bond."

Now, as I reach the end,
Too well I know that I have labored in efforts
Where I have wanted greatly to succeed;
Too oft I've seen my dreams dim in the forming,
Prove naught but vain imaginings indeed.

But this I do believe: when I have traveled
Life's twisting road, and wound out Life's great plan—
When I have gone beyond praise or blame—
It will be said of me "He was a man."

And so, because of this, I feel shame
When I bequeath to you, my name.
