Finis Written To Hollywood Romance

Bodies Slumped Down In Auto Tell Mute Tale Of Love Grown Cold In Hollywood.

Hollywood, Cal.—Finis was written Friday in a tragedy of love grown cold as police apparently accepted that explanation of the deaths from gunshot wounds of Hamilton W. Mannon youthful motion picture executive and Betty N. Gottlieb a striking beauty of 25.

Slumped down together in the front seat of an automobile in a residence district the two were found late last night. Mannon was dead, the girl, unconscious and mortally wounded, clutched a revolver.

Film chiefs deplored the death of Mannon, only 26 years old and vice-president of Tec-Art Studios, "who was respected and loved," according to one producer. Meanwhile, detectives were unable to learn more of the woman, who they believed shot Mannon and then ended her own life.

Mannon's business associates said he had known the girl about a year and a half and recently had tried to sever their acquaintance-ship.

In her room at a private home, where the mystery of her past was as deep as among her close acquaintances, investigators found a little book of verses. A poem entitled "Shadows," the last line of which said:

"But can't you find a little good to love in me?" was followed by an underscored passage from Omar Khay-Yam, as follows:

"And fear not lest existence, closing your Account and mine, should know the like no more."

Mannon, one of the youngest executives in the film colony, came here two years ago from New York. He also carried the title of vice-president of the New York office of Tec-Art Studios.
