

BUILDING MOVES FAST IN SOUTH

This paper has it been possible to publish such a list of great enterprises now under construction in the South as we are giving today," said the Manufacturers' Record in a recent issue. "Hydro-electric enterprises by the dozen, involving expenditures for individual plants from a few million dollars up to one which will require an investment of over 50,000,000; great cement plants costing from $1,000,000 to $5,000,000; enormous hotels and office buildings; railroad bridges, highway bridges, bank buildings, harbor improvements all combine to make a showing for construction work in the South, as has never before been made in this section, and possibly never before made in any section of the United States. Here is unrolled a panorama of vast enterprises of every variety.

"Capital from other sections is pouring into the South by the hundreds of millions. Southern capital is joining in the work of Southern upbuilding.

"In this survey we have not touched on the great highway building work under way, we have not included thousands of smaller enterprises under construction, but have only selected here and there in different parts of the South some striking phases of material advancement, leaving to the reader's imagination to fill in the picture the outlines of which we have simply broadly sketched.

"Here is a story of material advancement that really beggars description, and somewhat staggers the imagination as one attempts to grasp its full meaning and the effect which the enterprises now under way will have in tremendous stimulating further development.

"Surely Secretary Hoover made a safe prediction when a few days ago in an interview with Nashville Tennessean and other Southern papers he said:

"Industrially, the South is a section of the world where the largest development must take place in the next 25 years."

"Shortly before his death Henry M. Flagler, the great empire builder of Florida, said to the editor of the Manufacturers Record in a somewhat stronger statement even than that of Mr. Hoover:

"The next quarter of a century of material advancement belongs to

"Mr. Flagler had backed his faith in Florida and the South by the investment of from $75,000,000 to $100,000,000 of his own money, and his prediction as to his own beloved Florida and the South at large, and the predictions of the Manufacturers Record for more than forty years, are now being fulfilled almost beyond the dreams of the past.

President's Home On Auction Block

(Lester B. Finkelstein, INS Staff Correspondent.)

New York—One hundred years ago a magnificent mansion occupied a dominant position in what was then the heart of the most fashionable section of New York City.

The stately edifice was the mecca of the elite. Foreign diplomats, statesmen and others of the cream of the social and political world rolled up in smartly liveried equipages and entered its portals. Visitors and townfolks alike gazed at it in awe as they passed.

It was the home of a man who for eight years had occupied the highest position in this country and administered its affairs in a number which gained him the respect and admiration of the world.

It was the home of Monroe, the fifth president of the United States. A few days ago it was sold at auction for $10,000.

When President Monroe lived in the house, it was situated at #3 France street on the corner of LaFayette street, after his death on July 4, 1831, it was occupied by his son-in-law, Samuel Gouverneur.

The building eventually passed into other hands. In 1912, Henry Fruhauf, a clothing manufacturer, interested in the building and its history, sought to found a Monroe museum there.

Later, threatened by building operations in the rapidly changing neighborhood, the weather-beaten structure was moved to its present site at 95 Crosby street. The Monroe House association was formed for the purpose of preserving the structure. This organization tried to raise $20,000 to buy the site of the building but failed.

Every husband admits his wife showed sound judgment when she picked him out.

When the average man thinks of home he has in mind the stump of a good cigar, an old pair of slippers, an old chair and a footstool.

A cigar smoker never held up a train.

If you want to flatter a man ask him for advice in a love affair.

This novel method of keeping restless youth quiet was devised at a recent contest to select the healthiest child in Los Angeles. The tots were kept happy while the judges were choosing.

Takes Stitches In A Wounded Heart

Washington, N. C.—One of the most remarkable surgical operations ever performed was successfully consummated at the Washington hospital when Dr. D. T. Taylor, Jr., took several stitches in the heart of Augustus Lucas, colored, age 18, closing a wound which had been made in the left auricle by the blade of a penknife. Lucas was reported as being in a satisfactory condition and it is believed that he will recover.

The young negro was brought to the Washington hospital Monday evening, and physicians immediately diagnosed his condition as being due to a punctured heart. The youth was rushed on the operating table. A vertical incision was made down the middle of his chest. At each end of this were made horizontal incisions, all of considerable length. The skin, muscles and tissues were then folded back.

Before the heart could be reached it was necessary to make an opening through the ribs. Four ribs were severed from the breast bone, and Dr. Taylor was then able to get to the pericardium, or the sac in which the heart itself lay exposed. The place where the organ had been punctured was plainly visible, but in order to sew up the wound, it was necessary for the surgeon to exercise the greatest care and discretion, for the heart was pulsating steadily.

Think Son Czar Still Living Now

(By International News Service.) London—The heir to the Russian throne, son of the former czar, and who would now be the rightful emperor, is believed to be alive.

Czarevitch Alexis, as the former prince and heir apparent, was known, was supposedly killed during the massacre of the Russian Royal family, when Russia was in the grip of a revolution. Reports reaching London, however, give evidence of the discovery and mysterious story of a twenty-two year old man living in the Polish town of Bygoszcz. Were the Czarevitch alive, his age would be the same.

This youth calls himself Eugen Nikolaevitch Ieanoff, and says that he fled to Poland from his native country, Russia, nine years ago in the company of a Cossack.

He denies that he is the Russian heir, but every Sunday for the past five years, has adorned himself in the uniform of a high officer in the Russian nobility. Russian monarchists, who have seen him in Poland, declare that the likeness between him and the "dead" Alexis is remarkable. Ivanoff also suffers from the same mysterious malady as did the boy Czarevitch—haemophilia.

At present this young man lives by embroidery work, at which is he an expert, as was the boy heir.

The Polish Catholic clergy have declared themselves supporters of Ivanoff, and it is rumored that he is bidding his time, remaining in seclusion until a time when he will attempt to overthrow the Soviet Republic, and regaining his throne, bring back the reign of monarchy to Russia.

"Sow By The Year." Chatham Record.

Our friend Roland Beasley, of the Monroe Journal, will not, we fear, make a reputation as an etymologist. He went off into the sticks of Union some time ago and heard a woman use the word "sousing," in the sense of large or overwhelming, and came back and introduced "sousing" as a new word and advised its use. Others have commented upon the "discovery." We assume that the "new" word is only a Union county variation of the good old word "sousing," which, for instance, we found ourselves using thus the other day, "a sousing rain." That is the proper etymological use of the word, then inferentially applied in the sense of large, as a sousing crowd, etc. Everybody, presumably, knows what souse, and therefore there is no secret about what "sousing" means, and a few students of words would find any difficulty in accounting for a rustic woman's variation of it to "sousing."

Just Green Greed Behind Big Coin

Capitalist Honey-mooning In Europe At 77 Tells How Millions Are Made.

Charles R. Flint, the seventy-seven-year-old New York capitalist who has been visiting England on his honeymoon, has given Londoners a philosophy of a millionaire; the low-down on what the big fellow thinks of the little fellow, and the world in general, relates a London dispatch to The New York Times.

"Can you tell me," he was asked, "why a multi-millionaire like yourself, after he has amassed millions, goes on increasing his collection instead of retiring and enjoying life, as one of us would?"

He smiled: "Sure! There is only one reason. Greed!"

"Is it not because of ambition, a craving for power," said the interviewers, thinking they might have misunderstood him.

He smiled again. "No. It is pure green greed," he replied. "Ambition and power certainly play a part in keeping him keen, but greed, and greed alone, is the reason for a man's wanting to swell his wad million after million.

"But if he had, say, $250,000," his questioners assured him, "we would retire to the country and enjoy ourselves."

"You might," Mr. Flint conceded, "but if I or some one else fixed you up as millionaires, how many of you would ask to be relieved of the responsibility at the end of the week? None."

"No, I would not care to be poor again," he continued in response to a further question, "not a bit. Nevertheless, a big fortune is a great responsibility. And I admit," he added, in reply to the next question, "that, of course, I would not be as happy without my bank roll."

"How do some people make such vast fortunes while most can not?" echoed Mr. Flint to his questioners. "Well, God has favored some men highly and has given them gifts which they use to make money. The last business I started ran on an old-man living in the Polish town of Bygoszcz. Were the Czarevitch alive, his age would be the same."

sums, the fun of big business. They're different. Marriage is right, though. I spent forty-two happy years, with my wife as my best pal and now I've been lucky again in my second.

New Way To Certify a Check

The Robesonian. It came out in the trial of E. Garland Brown at Whiteville recently that this sometime attorney advised a new way to certify a check.

It was in evidence that this erstwhile limb of the law had a penchant for uttering checks that did not speak with authority. These checks had a way of falling down on the job and coming back to roost with the persons to whom they were given. It came to pass that an old colored woman to whom the aforesaid E. Garland tendered a check for $10 for value received had heard of this inconvenient habit of the E. Garland checks, also had heard that a certified check was the ace of the checks and could hold up its head and speak with authority in any company. So she told Mr. E. Garland that she didn't want anything but a certified check, that no common everyday check would pass with her.

"Here, I'll certify it," said Mr. E. Garland, and taking his pen in hand he turned the check over, wrote across the back, "I hereby certify that this check is good," signed that, and handed it back to the lady of color.

And she went on her way rejoicing. And she learned about checks from him.

KING AND QUEEN DECLINE TO POSE FOR MOVIE CAMERA

(By International News Service.) London—Despite a very tempting offer King George and Queen Mary have declined to pose before a camera recording not only their features but their voices also.

Richard Washburn Child, representing an American film corporation called "Movietone," using all his diplomatic experiences and influence had practically arranged for the "camera interview"; so much so that a special camera and recording instrument had been sent via the Aquitania last Monday and was already on its way up to Hollywood, where the Royal family is at present in residence.

The King declined because he was afraid of starting a precedent. Already the Movietone corporation has obtained camera interviews with the King and Queen of Spain, Marshal Foch and Mussolini.

Hen Laid 24 Pounds of Eggs

A white leghorn pullet owned by George Weathers chicken farmer of Orangeburg, county, South Carolina has laid 24 pounds of eggs during the past ten months.

This hen was entered by Mr. Weathers in the National Egg Laying contest now being conducted at McCormick, South Carolina, and weighed, when entered, slightly over three and a half pounds. She has probably developed into a four pound hen and consequently has laid six times her weight in eggs in less than one year.

Such production as this makes the egg business a profitable one and proper selection and breeding go a long way to growing out hens to make such records.
