The Law Of Compensation

They were discussing Nature's law of compensation.

Said he:

"Take a man whose hearing is impaired, for instance. His eyesight is usually better, and his intuitive perception is invariably above the average.

And then she caught the point—

Since you mention it, I believe you are right. I have noticed that when a man has a short leg, the other is always longer."

With which thought in mind, we stroll forth into the fields of finance. Wherein lies the compensation for the man who suddenly awakes to the fact that he has allowed years to pass, without laying aside as much as he could?

Is it in the thought, "I had a good time, anyway?"

If that be compensation for shiftless, thriftless years, let him who believes it take joy therein.
