

DIFFERENT WAYS OF TREATING LIES

(Frank Kent in Baltimore Sun)

There are two ways of treating a "whispering campaign." One is the way Smith treats it; the other the Hoover way. There are differences of opinion as to their relative efficacy, but they are interesting as presenting a contrast.

On form, the politically seasoned Smith, concededly one of the most skilled campaigners who ever ran for the presidency, ought to know more about it than his opponent, who is making his first political flight, but there is room for argument. Lies in a presidential campaign are no new thing. Lies are the rule, not the exception. In every campaign they are numerous, inevitable, inescapable. No fight is free from them. In a presidential campaign the stake is greater and the field wider. Hence, the lies are more varied as well as more numerous, but they are an inevitable accompaniment of state as well as national campaigns.

In this campaign, on both sides, the lies have been more poisonous and virulent than usual. Smith, against the counsel of some of his advisers, who are not as politically smart as he is, had dragged a number of those concerning him into the open, branded them as false. It appears to have been good politics. It did several things: For one, it stood him out as a fearless fellow determined to permit no slur on his character to go unchallenged. For another, it gave his supporting press and spokesmen an opportunity to be righteously indignant and tremendously enthusiastic at the same time. For another it made it appear he was being foully attacked and that, indirectly at least, his opponent was responsible.

On the other side, the lies spread about Hoover have been every bit as virulent and actually more numerous. A list of twenty-eight has been compiled by his friends, who say it is only a partial one. They run all the way from the one that he is a surreptitious and solitary drinker to the one that he is to get $5,000,000 from the Soviet government if, after his election, he brings about Russian recognition. Some of the old gress last spring by Republican opponents of his nomination, recently have been circulated by the Democratic national committee. Two days ago, following a criticism of this by the Democratic New York World, it was announced this would be discontinued. It was making risky as well as ridiculous the effort to pin on the Republicans responsibility for the lies about Smith.

Some of Hoover's advisers have urged him to follow the Smith example and denounce the whisper campaign about him. They have particularly insisted that failure to answer meant letting Smith get away with the idea that the lies were all on one side. They have, however, been unable to move the Hoover determination to ignore them. He is convinced it is impossible to stop them; that it is impossible to denounce them all; that to denounce them at all dignifies them and gives them circulation; that lies will not do him any real damage; that the strong thing is to pay no attention to them unless made openly and by responsible persons.

Perhaps he has been converted to this policy by an incident of his pre-convention fight. Last May a small weekly sheet printed in Washington and financed by Republican Hoover enemies printed a particularly silly lie about him—the Chinese one. It was reprinted or rather referred to in a southern paper. His friends advised him to take no notice of it, but Hoover was mad and wrote a hot letter to the editor demanding retraction. Scared, the editor rushed to the senator from his state, who inserted the entire article in the Congressional Record, thus protecting the editor from libel and giving the story a country-wide circulation it never would have attained in any other way.

After that Mr. Hoover just "let 'em lie." That is what he is doing this time. Whether it is good politics remains to be seen. Anyway, it requires considerable self-restraint in a man as sensitive about such things as he.

WORRIED A LOT

Run-Down, Nervous, Appetite Gone, Lady Shows Great Improvement After Using Cardui.

Waterloo, S. C.—"I took Cardui at intervals for three years, and have been in good health since last fall," says Mrs. Noble J. Hayes, who lives near here. "My improvement after taking a course of this medicine was really remarkable. I am much stronger and can accomplish so much more work now. My weight increased twenty pounds, and my color is fresh and good. For a long time I had been feeling poorly. Some days I dragged around the house and had not enough energy to do my housework. I worried a lot about myself. I did not seem like myself, and my nerves were all on edge. I did not sleep well, and my appetite left me. I found Cardui to be an excellent tonic. After I had taken it a few weeks, I began to pick up and to gain in weight and strength. Now I am in fine health. I have recommended Cardui to many of my friends, and shall continue to do so."

For over 50 years, Cardui has been used with success and recommended by thousands of women for weakness and similar ailments. Try it for your troubles! At all drug stores. NC-192

PLASTIC DENTIST REMAKES FACES

Disguises Actors So Even Lon Chaney's Brother Wouldn't Know Him.

Hollywood, Cal.—"Making faces" has always been one of the rare sports of childhood the uglier the faces the better. Out here in Hollywood, where the great big kiddies of the movies romp, they're doing it in earnest. They not only make faces; they remake them.

Not by surgery, the kind of surgery that gave Fannie Brice a new nose and prettified Bull Montana. Hollywood remakes faces by a new method. They call it plastic dentistry.

The camera, says an article in the October issue of Photoplay Magazine has made obsolete the old methods of theatrical disguise. The crape beard and the grease-paint grimace won't stand the test of the emulsion so sensitive as to photograph color values of the slightest tint, show up painted lines for what they are.

As a result, there has been a constant research in all the big studios for new and workable methods of makeup. It remained for an obscure dentist to devise what is now perhaps the most important feature of facial distortion.

Dr. Arthur D. Freedman discovered that he could completely change a person's expression by remodeling his teeth. New lines were created; the whole cast of the countenance changed. He went to the movie magnates with his discovery.

Here is the way Dr. Freedman works. First, he studies the character for which a set of teeth is desired. He takes an impression of the mouth of the actor and reconstructs it in plaster of Paris. He then proceeds to build over the natural teeth with a new facing.

The artificial porcelain shell fits perfectly and is held in place by suction and with the aid of a substance which guarantees adhesion and yet permits easy removal. The shell is very thin and there is no speech interference. Once in place, the teeth are made to appear protruberant, to overlap, or to symmetrize so as to disguise completely the player.

GETS LIFE TERM IN MURDER CASE

Virginia Participant In Triangle Affair, Convicted At Galax.

Galax, Va.—Carl Davis, age 32, in the Carroll county court at Hillsville Monday, was given a verdict of first degree murder and a life sentence in the penitentiary for the murder of Sam Elswick at his (Davis') home, on July 21. The jury deliberated only about 15 minutes.

Sam Elswick, age 28, with his wife and two small children, the youngest five months old, lived as tenants on Davis land. Davis, who is unmarried, is said to have given up his house to the Elswicks and built for himself a small shack on the opposite side of the road nearby. He had to go by Elswick's house to get water from a spring, the only water available for use here.

Davis and Elswick worked at the carbide plant at Ivanhoe, just across the Wyeth county line, while the men lived at Rakestown, in Carroll county. The carbide plant runs day and night, working men in "shifts," changing, with three "shifts" in the 24 hours. Davis worked in day time and Elswick at night.

The trouble between the two men arose over the alleged intimacy of Davis and Elswick's wife, which the two bitterly denied at the time. Elswick's wife, however, admitted to the truth of the charge on the stand during the trial.

Elswick, on Friday morning, before the killing, came home about daylight and found Davis at his home. They had a quarrel, but later adjusted their differences. Davis explaining his presence there by saying he had come by to get some washing done. Davis went home. Elswick and his wife had a quarrel and he took her to her mother's.

Next day Elswick disappeared. Three weeks later the body, badly decomposed, was found in the bed of a branch about one-half mile from Davis' home. His skull was crushed, neck and arms broken, and other bruises about the body which was clothed in a shirt, wrapped in a sheet and quilt, with socks tied tightly around the head.

Prior to this, Davis had been arrested and placed in Hillsville jail. It was discovered that portions of the bed ticks in Davis' home had been cut out. Blood was also found on the floor under the bed, flooring had been sawed out and replaced by others. A portion of the floor at another point had been planed off and a trunk set over the place. The plane was later found upstairs in the shack with blood-stained shavings clinging to it.

Elswick, it was shown, was last seen alive at the Davis home beastly drunk. Davis, it was proven by different witnesses, had threatened to kill Elswick if he crossed his path.

The case has attracted much attention, and interest in both Grayson and Carroll counties. This is the heaviest verdict given in Carroll county in over 20 years.

CLOCK WINDER MISSES TASK ONCE IN 27 YEARS

Asheville.—For the first time in 27 years Louis W. Jeanneret this week failed to wind the big clock in the courthouse tower. Because he has been ill at his home, 216 East College street, for several days, he was unable to attend to that duty.

However, to be sure the clock was wound, he sent his 73-year-old wife to supervise the work, and unassisted she climbed the high steps in the tower where she told the janitor how to fix the old time piece. It was a difficult thing to do—a huge lever, by man power only, being used to wind the works.

MONUMENTS

Ornamental and Useful

Sometimes a monument is just an ornament and that is all. But there are plenty of monuments which tell a story, and which still are serviceable—practical, useful monuments.

When your County Officials build a good road, they build a useful monument. After they have passed from office, this road will continue to tell the story of their work in this County.

A good road . . . a permanent road, must have permanent drainage. And a road is bound to be most permanent as far as drainage is concerned, if it is drained with
