BLOATED FEELING. And Other Troubles Went Away After This South Carolinian Had Taken Black-Draught. Iva, S. C.—"I have used Black-Draught, at intervals, for about five years," says Mr. J. F. Gilliland, of this place. "I take it for indigestion. After eating, I would have a tight, bloated feeling, and pains in my chest and stomach. I would spit up my food, and some things I ate would not agree with me at all. I would be hungry, but afraid to eat on account of the indigestion. I would be constipated, too. "Some one told me that I should try Black-Draught, which I did with good results. I take just a small dose after meals, and I feel like a different person. "I do not have any more trouble of that kind. I can now eat almost anything I want to, at any time, and it does not hurt me. "Black-Draught is a splendid medicine. I can recommend it to others." Thousands of people have found relief, in cases of common indigestion, by taking a pinch of Black-Draught after meals, and continuing this treatment for several days. Take Theford's Black-Draught. It is purely vegetable and acts in helpful way, without the bad effect of mineral drugs. NC-16

Arab 153 Years Old.

Cairo.—An official deputation which included the provincial police commandant and the director of education—according to Arab newspapers—visited a skeleton-like Arab, aged 153, living in Fayum, near Cairo.

The man, who lives in a tiny room, six feet square, is in complete possession of his senses.

He said he remembered Mahommed Ali, who massacred the Mamlukes (in 1811), driving through the streets of Cairo. He said that he became a soldier when he was a young man of 40, and declared that his youngest son was a youth of 26.

The old man retains an interest in politics, and declares that more rights are enjoyed under the present rule than under that of the century before last.

The man was born in 1776—the year of the American Declaration of Independence.

George III was king of England. Louis XVI was king of France. Napoleon was only a young artillery officer.

Nelson had just completed—1773—his voyage to the Arctic regions, and Trafalgar was 29 years away.

Influenza Much Milder This Year Than In 1918

But Vicks Laboratories Again Operating Night and Day to Supply Record-Making Demand.

Although the type of flu this year is not so serious as in 1918, health authorities are urging everybody to treat even the slightest cold at the start, as colds lower the resistance and make the body an easy prey to bronchitis or pneumonia.

An interesting response to this warning has been the phenomenal call for Vicks VapoRub, the external treatment which proved so helpful in the 1918 epidemic.

In spite of vastly increased capacity, the Vicks laboratories are once more operating all night long and are now producing 432,000 jars daily. A substantial part of this increase is attributed to the widespread use of Vicks as a preventive.

Judge Clements Tells 'Em

(From Winston-Salem Journal.) "There is certainly one thing the people of North Carolina will have to learn and that is that a person must not drive an automobile while he is under the influence of whiskey," Judge John H. Clement, of this city, who is presiding over a criminal term of Guilford superior court, voiced this sentiment Tuesday while announcing a sentence imposed upon Turner Matthews for an offense of this kind. "The courts may be a long time in teaching this lesson, but it must be taught," Judge Clement is quoted as saying. Matthews being a young man and this being his first appearance in the courts, was let off with a fine of $25 and costs, but a four-month suspended sentence was added.

GHOST CAME BACK AND POINTED OUT DEAD MAN'S GOLD

Albemarle Man Tells Of What He Knew And Saw When A Boy Of Six.

Monroe Journal.

In the Stanly News Herald Mr. Charles McSwain tells the story of hidden gold that was revealed by the ghost of a departed husband. With most of us, he says, our experience with buried treasure has ended with our dreams.

But out, a well-known Albemarle man, declares that he has experienced the real thing. He made his confession to me only a few days ago.

When the man was a boy of 6, he used to see a certain old woman whose real name was—oh, well, let us call her old Mrs. Peggy Peabody—who was a terrible mystery to the community. Nobody knew how old she was, but her leathery old face was worn and wrinkled and smacked of a wisdom gained from communion with spirits and the occult.

Her husband had been killed in the Revolutionary War. And certainly the old Mrs. Peabody had lived alone in an old log cabin as far back as anybody in the community could remember. Often she was seen waddling along over the woods, supporting herself with a big crooked stick, bent nearly double, and chanting a strange litany that nobody could understand. Rumor had it that on these long walks she visited a pot of buried treasure from which she secured enough gold to buy sustenance and things she wanted. Others claimed, however, that she visited spirits of the dead and that the devil himself fed her from his own hand.

Why they should have entertained such an evil belief as this is not known, because old Mrs. Peggy Peabody was a woman who always minded her own business and never did anybody any harm.

"She never went anywhere, except to our house," said the Albemarle man. "I remember seeing her there lots of times, but never heard her say one thing. She would come waddling up to the house and after my mother had fetched her a chair and she had seated herself, she would always say: 'He was back last night, but didn't leave any word.'"

The Albemarle man stated that he often wondered what she had reference to, and who the "he" was that old Mrs. Peggy was always referring to. When he would ask his mother to explain, she would simply smile and answer that it was beyond her.

One morning old Mrs. Peggy Peabody came waddling to the home of the Albemarle man's parents, making a little more time than usual. She was trying to hurry. From time to time she would glance back over her shoulder as though she suspected herself of being pursued. Arriving at the house, she called for the Albemarle man's father. "Mother sent me to tell him," he said, "and I remember we both went back to the house on a run. The minute father was in the house old Mrs. Peabody said: 'He was back last night and told me there was a pot of treasure under the hearth rock. He said for me to get it and do what I wanted to with it. Said he wouldn't be back any more. I don't know whether it's there or not, but I'd like for you to come and lift up the rock. It's too heavy for me to lift.'"

"What did you do then," I inquired, interested. "Just coming to that," said the Albemarle man. "Why father told me to go and bring up old Beck and give her a bucket of water while he got the harness ready. Well, he hitched old Beck, our fifteen-year-old mule, to the buggy and I sat in old Mrs. Peabody's lap while my father drove. He used the whip frequently, and we went trotting all the way from our house to the home of Mrs. Peabody. I remember my father was in such a hurry that he didn't take time to tie old Beck, but just left her. "We hurried into the house as quickly as we could, and old Mrs.

Peggy Peabody closed and bolted the door. Then my father commenced tugging at the huge old hearth stone. He grunted a right smart, but finally it began to give and shortly my father had it laying over on the floor. Old Mrs. Peggy Peabody fetched a broom and swept away the dust, and there, sure enough, was the top of a pot. It was an old Indian pot. "My father tried to lift it but couldn't and so he took the lid off instead. And we all stood looking for the pot was level full of gold coins, all yellow and shining.

Continuing, the Albemarle man stated that the old woman explained what she meant by: 'He was back last night, but didn't leave any word.' It was her husband who was killed in the Revolutionary War.

It seems that the dead husband had been coming back and visiting his widow once each month since he was killed on the battle field. On every visit he stated that he had something to tell her, but said he couldn't remember exactly what it was. When he finally remembered, the pot of gold was the ultimate result.

The Albemarle man declares this tale is the honest-to-goodness truth because he saw it with his own eyes. And he is none other than J. T. Cole, a man of integrity and undoubted veracity.
