

Harris Writes Of Increase Fee To Officers In County

To the Editor of The Star: Dear sir: I read an article in your paper a few days ago about Mr. A. E. Cline bucking the Mull bill, and paying a reward for catching a man with whiskey. He says there is about 1500 cases tried yearly and practically all of them are liquor cases. I believe Mr. Mull (Recorder) said about 40 per cent were connected with whiskey that came before him. That will give about 600 cases that whiskey is connected with. I'll venture to say that not half of them were caught with whiskey. Say half would be 300 at $5.00 each would be $1500. I can't see where it would cost the county $10,000 when most of them get off with a fine and the $5.00 is paid in the case by the defendant. How would it cost the county much when if I understand the bill, if only $2.50 instead of $5.00. I don't believe the Mull bill is as big a bugger as Mr. Cline saw anyway. If all the cases that go to court were whiskey cases it helps the school. If you can pay $5.00 to catch any and get fifty in return. It looks like business to me. I don't know how to look to our county business manager. Its not fair to put all the prohibition enforcement on the deputies and not pay them for it, under the present law the deputies get $2.00 for catching a liquor man and fifty cents for appearing against him in court. It usually takes a better part of the day to go to town and try a case and get back home. If Mr. Cline thinks a deputy can live at that I would like for him to try it. If everybody will help a little we can have a dry county as well as a dry law.

T. B. HARRIS.

Dies in Italy

Lady Elizabeth Carnarvon, widow of Lord Carnarvon and sister of Sir Esme Howard, British ambassador to Washington, who, according to reports from Italy, died after a lingering illness near Naples. Her explorer-husband was associated with Howard Carter, American scientist, in discovery of tomb of King Tut-Ankh-Amen, in Egypt, over the entrance to which was graven a prediction of death for those who might open the vaults. TO HONOR AUTHOR OF "EVANGELINE"

New Orleans.—That section of Louisiana made famous through Longfellow's immortal "Evangeline" is to be made a national park, with a stretch of country along famed Bayou Teche given over to the great sculptural groups depicting various characters and incidents in the poet's works, and with St. Martinville, where the original of "Evangeline" sleeps, the centre of the undertaking.

For Louisianians, many of them direct descendants of the Acadians who fled Nova Scotia in 1765 for the peace of the southland, have found that Canada and the New England section of the United States are as interested in the project as the Southerners who knew and love the Teche country. The state of Louisiana already has appropriated a substantial amount to be used in carrying through the plan, and congress is to be asked to provide an even larger sum.

St. Martinville, where Evangeline awaited the coming of her sweetheart, is scattered along the verdant banks of the Bayou Teche, 175 miles westward from New Orleans and on United States highway No. 90—Old Spanish Trail—and there the workers for the ambitious project plan to make a start on the project. Louisianians will provide the first great bronze figure, an heroic "Evangeline" to be followed by a gigantic group depicting the "The Builders" and provided by the building trades of America and Canada; the Indians of Canada and the United States have pledged a huge "Hiawatha" and school children of the two countries will be asked to contribute 1 cent each to the providing of a great group to portray "The Children's Hour."

At St. Martinville the visitor will find people and things little changed over the last 150 years. The patois of the Acadian—the "Cajun," to use Louisiana English—is still the tongue in which social and commercial intercourse is carried on. The highly-seasoned dishes of the Acadians still are served in their ancient deliciousness. The traveler will stand beside the spot where sleeps one Emmaline Labiche, original of the poem, and hear from direct descendants of her family the story of her search for the faithless Gabriel. They will wander beneath ancient oaks draped with Spanish moss, thrill to the beauty of bougainvillea and moonflower in profusion found nowhere else in the world; along the bayou lazily float millions upon millions of the lavender water hyacinth, and over all is the perfume of the jasmine.

In connection with the plans for a national park at St. Martinville, Louisianians now are working to bring about a great international highway to be known as the Longfellow-Evangeline national highway, extending from the Grand Pre Valley in Nova Scotia through Boston and down through Washington the Carolinas, Georgia and Alabama into Louisiana, with a branch extending to the Royal Palm Park in Florida.
