EVEN LOS ANGELES TIRES OF FLAPPER

Employers Don't Want Her, College Experts Says. Find Her Rattle-Brained.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Farewell, ye flappers! Come hither, ye old-fashioned girls.

Such has become the slogan of Los Angeles, known the world over as the capital of flapperdom—largely because it also is the centre of the firm industry.

“Contrary to the prevailing belief that flappers have become the generally accepted thing, we have found that there is more sentiment against them than ever before,” declares Ned Marr, director of the alumni bureau of occupations at the University of California, at Los Angeles.

“Our records show that the sweet young thing who spend much of her time with paint, powder and rouge and is overconscious of her appearance is ‘not in demand,’” continued Marr. “She stands a poor show alongside of her plainer sister whose education, practical application and skill in training make her valuable in business.”

Want No Flappers. “A large number of the persons who call us for girls to do part-time work specify that they do not want any flappers. Many of the positions we secure for co-eds are in private homes, doing housework, taking care of children or as companions for older people. In nearly every instance those asking for girls to do this kind of work specify that they must be sensible, dependable, home-loving girls, who do not go out much and do not spend three-fourths of their time before a mirror.

“Even men who want girls in offices shun the flapper type. They do not consider them the equal of plainer girls from the standpoint of ability or poise. Particularly, if a girl is to be in a reception room, she must have a personality and poise that employers don't seem to find in a flapper.

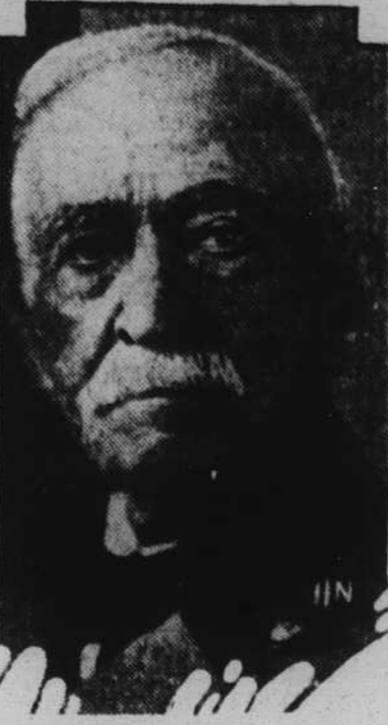

“From my own experience in this bureau, I think that the pretty stenographer idea is vastly overworked. I find that most men prefer the plainer girl who is efficient and doesn't spend a great part of her time thinking of dates.”

Calls ‘Em Rattle-Brained. Marr, as head of the alumni employment bureau at the university, supervises the filling of about 2,500 jobs every year. Most of them are odd jobs lasting only a day or two. But between 400 and 500 of them are permanent part-time positions. The majority of calls for girls are for housework, companions for children or old folk, office work, waiting on table in tea rooms and piano accompanists.

“I don't mean that there is no demand for pretty girls,” he explains. “There is a vast difference between a pretty girl and a flapper. In fact, a flapper very often isn't pretty. My idea of a flapper is a girl who is flighty, has very little poise, is forward nd to some extent rattle-brained.

“About the only calls we get for the flapper type girl is from advertising agencies who want to use them for newspaper pictures. They nearly always ask for the flappers because they figure they will attract attention quicker than the most conservative girl even though the latter may be far more beautiful.”

COMES TO CAROLINA TO GET PROTESTANT WIFE

Mount Airy.—Circumstances a little out of the ordinary attended a marriage which took place here recently.

Albert Dommert, a rice grower of Louisiana, accompanied his son to this city and spent several days here while his son, August Dommert put the finishing touches on a courtship which had been carried on by mail and induced Miss Gracie Haymore, of Surry county to accompany him back to Louisiana as his wife.

The father let it be known that he did not approve of marriages between Protestants and Catholics. All the young people in his community were Catholics, hence the journey to a 'far country' in search of a suitable mate for his son.

To force a tenant to move F. C. Goodyear of New Orleans carried away the door of the house, but a blanket was hung up in its place.

A quarrel with Miss Constance Flordan of St. Paul developed into a hairpulling match and a large section of Miss Eliza Johnson's scalp was torn off.

Thaddeus Ssolgorki of Warsaw was sentenced to 10 years in prison for dragging his wife along the street and offering her at auction.

Marian Terry, 16 and her nine younger brothers and sister of Okmulgee, Okla., have been left more than $200,000 by Clinton Lyon a wealthy oil man who died recently. He was not a relative of the Terry family.
