Lips Tell Tales Even When They Are Closed-Other Signs

If you would measure the quality of a man, look first into his eyes. But if you would gauge the character of a woman, study her lips first and then try to find out whether her eyes confirm their message.

The mouth, lips and chin from the motional area of the face. And it is right and natural that women, the mothers of the race, should be more actuated by their feelings, impulses and emotions than men are.

One does not need to be a student of faces to realize that the mouth does betray the emotions. Instinctively we recognize a cruel mouth or a kindly one, a generous or a mean. We may speak of a sensitive mouth, but we do not speak of a clever one. Evidently, then, our lips are the gateway to our emotions.

"A man's eyes show what he might have been, or what he may become," says an old Oriental proverb, "but his mouth shows what he has been and is now."

There are many small indications in the mouth, lips and chin which are very important in the study of

All else being equal, large mouths have more character than small ones-not necessarily better character, but at least more strength of

A long, straight upper lip denotes firmness of character, stamina, grit and mental endurance. There is no doubt about this, or otherwise where should we have got the phrase: "Keep a stiff upper lip?"

A short upper lip is a sign of impatience. When it is particularly short in a woman you will probably find querulousness and perhaps an inclination to easy tears. A man that self-control tends to close that with a very short upper lip is likely to be a "grouser.

Upper lips long at the sides indicate breadth of comprehension and a wide field of ideas.

center, showing the teeth, you may naturally expect just the opposite characteristics, and it is a fact that a man with a lip like this is usually of an erratic disposition, not likely to stick very long in the same.

When the lips are habitually slightly open over shut teeth you may expect frankness of disposition and sometimes, particularly in women, much outspoken

A vertical indentation in the center of the upper lip is a sign of good

Full, well-formed lips almost always go with warmth of affection. A girl with ripe, red lips of the kind is an affectionate girl, and, other things being equal, she will be fond of kissing.

Thin lips are deficient in love and affection. They go with a cold, selfcentered and sometimes ascetic disposition. It has been said that a mouth denotes a loveless

Full, coarse, irregular lips generally indicate a certain strength and power of character, but I they are very coarse this power degenerates into rudeness and even grossness. A dropping under-lip shows lack of self-control and an impulsive, reckless disposition. A full lower lip, provided it be Caesar, firm-lipped and fairly wide, firm and not drooping, is generally country or devotion to a cause. When the upper lip lifts at either side when talking you may expect to find affection, love of praise and vanity. Lips curving upwards at the side are a sure sign of mirthfulness and Lips curving downwards indicate gravity and seriousness and a sense little importance in comparison with of responsibility when the curve is only slight, but when they really turn down at the corners, the gravity becomes gloom. Men or women with really turned down mouths are nearly always kill-joys and wet blankets. They are most uncomfortable people to live with. It would be possible to go into far greater detail about the mouth and lips, but the smaller signs could hardly be explained without illustrations. I will, therefore, only add lips and draw them back, while impulse opens them and pushes them forward.

The shape of the chin and jaw is almost as important as that of the Receding chin goes with weak will power. When they are both receding and narrow you may expect positive feebleness and indecision of character. A prominent, out-thrust chin shows firmness of character, but, if it projects very sharply, you may also expect a warmly affectionate and artistic nature.

However, it must be remembered that it is never safe to judge character by one feature alone. For men and women build their own characters, and, in so doing, they do to When the upper lip lifts in the some extent shape their own faces.
