Republican Party Born In A Small Town; How Named

Horace Greeley Suggested Name In Newspaper Editorial. A Jefferson Name.

Washington.—To decide whether the Republican party was born in Ripon, Wis., or Jackson, Mich., one must first define the way in which a political party is actually born.

The reason Jackson and Ripon are still arguing the question on the eve of 75th anniversary celebration of the birth is that a party isn't always born as a person is born. It may be born in several places, simultaneously or progressively.

Few authorities have undertaken arbitrarily to land all the honors either to Ripon or Jackson. Dr. Edward Stanwood, in his widely consulted History of the Presidency merely says:

"The Republican party originated in the west. A mass meeting at Ripon, Wis., early in 1854, followed soon afterward by a mass state convention at Jackson, Mich.; and state conventions in July in Vermont, Wisconsin, Ohio and Indiana brought the new party into being, with its present name, and with opposition to the extension of slavery as the one issue that united its members.

Prof. William Starr Myers, the most recent historian of the party, makes a graceful bow to Ripon and then says that "the next great step in the final organization of a new party, and the step usually accepted by historical judgment as being the actual beginning of the Republican organization, was taken when a state convention was held, a little over three months after the Ripon meeting, at Jackson, Mich., on July 6, 1854."

Myers draws largely from Henry Wilson's The Rise and Fall of the Slave Power and The Republican Party, by Francis Curtis.

The Kansas-Nebraska bill, which repealed the Missouri Compromise, split the Whig and Democratic parties wide open and furnished the big for the new organization. The amalgamation of the anti-slavery element was a "synchronous rising in many places."

The name "Republican" was re-adopted from that of Thomas Jefferson's old party, which had been discarded in favor of "Democratic" in Jackson's time. Like all good Democrats, many Republicans to this day trace their political ancestry back to Jefferson.

Organization of the new party came from a movement of many persons outside of politics, who had no political jobs to lose. Anti-Nebraska conventions were held, however, and often were called jointly by regular committees of the old Whig, Democratic and Free Soil parties. Newspapers joined in the movement, which was especially strong in the northwest. Myers says:

"Probably the meeting which especially deserves the credit for leading the way in the organization of a new party was that held at Ripon, Fond du Lac county, Wis., and Mr. Alvin E. Bovay, a prominent member of the Whig party who lived in that town, was the prime mover in calling the convention, and also in the use of the name Republican for the new party."

Ripon is a small town. It has a population of only about 4,000 today. Bovay was a lawyer who had come from New York in 1850. In 1852 he was visiting his old friend Horace Greeley in New York and remarked that there must be a new party which would demand extinction of slavery from the territories. When Greeley asked him what he would call this party Bovay replied "Republican."

In 1854 he wrote the famous editorial urging him to advocate mass meetings of Kansas-Nebraska bill opponents everywhere to band together under that name, saying: "It is the only one that will serve all purposes, present and future—the only one that will live and last." Greeley a few months later suggested the name in a Tribune editorial.
