

Twenty-four Jail Terms Fail To Dim Love Of This Couple

Hattie And Harry Still Just An Old-Fashioned Couple Scorn A Divorce.

New York World. Some say husband and wife should have separate residences. Others declare they should eat only one meal a day together. One clique advocates companionate marriages, another easier divorces. Some suggest frequent separations.

Well, Harry and Hattie Campbell have been separated for a large part of the thirty years they have been married—perforce, for he has been arrested fourteen times during those years and she ten, and both have been many times behind prison bars—and they are, they say, as much in love now as they were on their wedding day.

Do they, therefore, advocate frequent separations as the sure formula for happy marriages? They do not.

"Wouldn't it be nice," sighed Hattie, she and Harry pleaded guilty to grand larceny in the second degree before Judge Mancuso in general sessions last week—"wouldn't it be nice if we there they say, I could see him once in a while."

In Separate Prisons. Harry, sixty-three, is an outstanding, prosperous looking man, with thick gray hair, which he wears parted in the middle. He looks, even in the Tombs, rather like a professional man. Hattie, who is fifty-six, is in Jefferson Market prison—a matronly person who looks as though she might once have been a very attractive girl.

Her light brown hair is still untouched by gray. Her last "bit" was four months in the penitentiary. They were interviewed separately but their views on marriage coincided. They are, they said, an "old fashioned" pair, looking somewhat askance at certain modern ideas about marriage. "Why," said Harry, "we both think such things as trial marriages and divorce are terrible."

They agree, similarly, in their affection for each other.

"Hattie," according to Harry, "is just the grandest woman in the world. We've been married all these years and are just as much in love with each other as ever. Whether we are separated by oceans or by prison bars, we keep in close communion by mental telepathy. I'd go to the electric chair, if it would save her from prison. I'd even say I killed Rothstein. They don't make many women like her. We have stood together through thick and thin, and never even had a quarrel."

Hattie In Tears. And thus Hattie: "When we married it was for better or for worse, and while we are in difficulties we are still in love. All I care about is my husband. I don't think he'll come out of jail alive. I'd hate to get out of prison and feel I would never see him again." There were tears in her eyes as she said this.

It was his affection for her, they said, that led to their personal predicament. They'd been married thirty years and Harry wanted to give her a little present. So last December they went to the jewelry store of Charles Goldsmith, No. 20 West 36th street, selected a jade bracelet and paid a deposit on it.

When they'd gone the clerk said he missed other bracelets worth $16,000, and described the respectable-looking couple to the police, who at once guessed that Harry and Hattie were up to their old tricks again.

"We figured we might as well plead guilty, even if we are innocent," said Harry. "If our record was read to a jury, what chance would we have?"

And Hattie: "Imagine that man who talked so nicely to us, accusing us of taking six bracelets. The police didn't find the jewelry in our possession, and yet we were arrested. Just because we had a record! What's the use of trying to go straight?"

Both Harry and Hattie have traveled extensively in Europe, and Hattie claims to be descended from a family of the Swedish nobility. Their two children died several years ago.

Boy Keeps Harelip, Moon Is Not Right

Raleigh.—Because of his father's fear of designing doctors and a superstition that this is the wrong time of the moon, four-year-old Charlie Bane's harelip and cleft pallet will not be corrected.

Charlie had almost reached the operating table at a Raleigh hospital recently, where the operation was to be performed free by a physician with a humanitarian heart, when the father announced that if "anything happens to make Charlie go off, I'm going to sue the doctor."

He said "Charlie's all right now, and I don't want no doctors experimenting on him. Besides this ain't the right time of the moon. You gotta do things on the right time of the moon. Charlie's a smart boy. He don't mind hot and he, don't mind cold. He can hold out as long as anybody."

The harelip is an unusually disagreeable one, extending into the nostril. It is accompanied by a cleft pallet.

Bane then turned to Mrs. Kathleen B. Holding and Miss Lois Doshier, of the state board of charities and public welfare, who had succeeded in getting the father of the disabled child into the hospital. "I don't know what you are getting out of this, but I know you are being paid by headquarters. Those doctors just want to experiment on him."

Bane is the father of 14 children, 11 of whom are living. He says that it is all he can do to get meat and cornbread for them to eat. There are four sets of twins. One 11-year-old girl died with acute appendicitis. She was moved to the hospital too late and her father always resented the fact that the "doctors experimented on her in her last hours and worried her."

Over a Beauty

Budapest.—Information comes to the Jewish Telegraph agency that there has been an anti-Semitic agitation against Miss Elizabeth Simon, beauty chosen to represent Europe at a Galveston pageant. There has been a demonstration outside her house; theaters in the city of Kesneteky have discontinued news reels depicting her.

Calendar Change Would Upset Sunday

To the Editor: Many people are puzzled and are wondering what all this talk about a new calendar or the proposed "revision of the calendar" means. In conversing with many as I have been through various sections of North and South Carolina, I find a growing sentiment that our central government at Washington should have nothing to do with any proposed "revision of the calendar" that would in any way disturb or interfere with the original weekly cycle as given to us by the Lord himself at creation.

If, for commercial advantages, it seems advisable to make a correction over our present method of reckoning the year by the Gregorian calendar, that can be figured out without disturbing the weekly cycle. I believe no sensible person would raise any objection. For such changes have been made in the past. But, to start counting time by any method that would cause the world to lose the identical week, marked as it is by the weekly recurrence of God's Holy day of worship would be an insufferable blow at the very heart of the religious life of all conscientious Christians and Jews alike.

For one of the greatest blessings given to the human race by its Creator, is the weekly recurring "day of rest," the Sabbath. And, although all are not agreed as to what identical day is the one, Saturday or Sunday, nevertheless, all are agreed that Jehovah should be worshipped on one day out of each week, or recurring seven days. So, to adopt a calendar that would have to reckon one or more days as "blank days," not belonging to any particular week, would greatly embarrass all conscientious worshippers of the true God, the Lord Jesus Christ, who according to Eph. 3:9, is the Creator of all, and therefore "Lord even of the Sabbath day." Mark 2:27-28.

I believe your good paper would be doing its readers a real service by explaining to them the object of this proposed legislation now pending before congress, and advising them to petition the Hon. Congressman as to how he should represent them on this important question.

Anyone desiring free information in regard to this widely discussed matter will be gladly furnished with such by the Religious Liberty association of Carolina, 215 N. McDowell street, Charlotte. This organization is a branch of the national Religious Liberty association with headquarters in Washington, D. C. It has for its existence the purpose of ever keeping before the public the great principles upon which our fair land and its matchless constitution were founded. political and religious freedom, that is total separation of church and state. The quarterly magazine "Liberty," the official organ of the association, is at the present time issuing an "extra" giving the contents of a bill introduced into the recent congress proposing a change in the calendar.

Hoping that our fair country will never follow in the footsteps of infidel France of the days of the French Revolution in trying to obliterate God's memorial of creation and of sanctification, the Sabbath day, I am, Respectfully yours, H. N. BRASS, Morganton, R-1, Box 95.

SHOOT WIFE BECAUSE SHE WOULD NOT COME HOME

Paris.—Details of a singular case, that of a "duly signed contract" to a friend for 260 francs (a little over $10.00), wanted her back and shot her dead because she refused to return to him, were unfolded at the Paris Assize court.

The accused—an Italian musician named Antonio Christofano, aged 33—was playing in the jazz band of a dance hall at Lyons seven years ago when he fell in love with a young and pretty waitress of the establishment. They were married and came to Paris.

One night last year he came home to find that his wife had gone to join another Italian musician, one of his own friends, named Pistaffa.

Next day the deserted husband called on his rival, and, after a fight, told him that he was willing to come to an arrangement. A few days later Christofano sent two friends to Pistaffa. A document was drawn up, by which Christofano gave up all right to his wife and "ceded her to his friend Pistaffa for 260 francs." It was stipulated that certain articles the wife had taken with her were to be returned to the husband.

Shortly afterwards Christofano called on Pistaffa and said he wanted his wife back. He was roughly shown the door.

Two weeks later Christofano waited outside the shop where his former wife was working. When she appeared he asked her to return to him.

"Never," was the woman's reply, whereon Christofano fired five revolver shots at her. She died a few hours later.

Eight years' hard labor and ten years' banishment from France was the sentence when Christofano was found guilty.

Flood Crest Slowly Passes in South

Scenes such as this near West Point, Ga., are common throughout the flooded districts of Georgia and Alabama where more than 20,000 have been made homeless and the death toll is still mounting in the unprecedented floods which have prevailed State militia and relief organizations have used airplanes to bring food to the sufferers, thus saving hundreds of lives.
