At The Theatres

The Webb theatre has inaugurated the continuous performance at the theatre, running continuously from one o'clock through eleven. This fills in the five-seven o'clock gap, which many people have expressed the desire to take advantage of. Many folks in Shelby, and outside the town also, for that matter, engaged in the afternoon and evening, will welcome the opportunity to sandwich a show in between whiles. The late afternoon show starts at five o'clock. Today's program at the theatre is "Square Shoulders," a romantic picture; with comedy, news reel and fables also on the bill. It is a full program.

"Trial Marriage," starring Norman Kerry, Sally Eilers and Jason Robards, a romantic drama of modern drama marital mix-ups is the feature picture at the Princess today. This is a modern picture—a tense drama set against a background of jazz. The story reveals what happened to a girl who entered into a trial marriage with one man while still engaged to another. This trial marriage idea, while as old as Eve, is a new theme insofar as modern society is concerned. It is an outgrowth of modernism, with us. The picture throws much light on the social experiment.
