Pretty Girl Says Farm Real Place On Which To Live

Young Club Girl, Prize Winner, Tells What Farm Life Is.

(By Virginia Terrell Lathrop)

The country is the place for real living, according to the creed of Ruth Alexander, of Fletcher, outstanding 17-year-old club girl of Western North Carolina, who, in seven years has accumulated prizes on cooking, canning, sewing and table service; who has been twice president of her local club; delegate from her club to two short courses at State college, and one of the four delegates from North Carolina to the 4-H encampment at Washington; who this year won the U. D. C. prize for the best essay written in the Fairview school, who has for two years been a member of her school debating team, a member of the girls' basketball team; who likes to swim, ride horse back, play bridge, drive a car, make her own clothes and hats and cook—and loves the country.

That is what Ruth enjoys doing, after deciding that a girl who lives in the country is happier than the girl who lives in the city. And she goes Marion Talley one better in that she enjoys actually living the life of the farm, not necessarily owning it.

Prior to taking up club work seven years ago, Ruth's ambition was to come to the city and be a teacher or a nurse. Now, try and get Ruth to the city!

Instead, her ambition now is to go to college and learn to be a Home Demonstration agent, and go back to the country. So she told the North Carolina Bankers at their convention in Asheville. Ruth is also quite public speaker. This is the second time she has been invited to address the bankers and tell them about club work.

And how does a girl on the farm spend her day? "That's easy," answers Ruth. "We get up about six o'clock, and help with the cooking and housework, and we have a prospect for beautifying our rooms and yards, and we have club meetings and picnic, and I have chickens of my own, and there's canning to be done—why a day isn't long enough!"

Ruth is one of the most modest girls it has ever been the privilege of a Girl's Club to send forth. The fact that she is a member of her school chorus, and has made some of the highest grades in school on her class work would go unused if one were not persistent. For to Ruth there is nothing unusual in all of her activities. It is in keeping busy that she finds life so full of interest.

She cannot understand how city people amuse themselves. They do so few things that are, to her, vital in the enjoyment of life. They have cooks and maids, and they are cramped in small houses and apartments. They find their amusement in riding around and going to shows. And that adds Ruth, is fine for a vacation.

the pioneer club members of Western North Carolina. She started her work so long ago that there were only agricultural clubs for boys and girls. The sewing, millinery, house planning, yard planting, table service, cooking, canning—all of these were yet to come. Ruth, with her vision of becoming a school teacher in a big city school, or a nurse in a big city hospital still was only ten, but she started bravely with a brood of chickens, and in a short time had fifty. The interest in poultry has never died though there has died the thought of school teaching or nursing.

Many more activities opened up gradually for the club girls, as Mrs. Jane McKimmon, State Home Demonstration agent, extended her work.

Ruth learned that a pretty room was not acquired at the expense of a lot of money. She got green paint, and under the direction of the county agent, painted her furniture. Then she made new curtains, hung new pictures, made new linen, and re-arranged the furniture. She took a project of yard beautification, and found that all beauty of the home was not confined to the inside.

All this time, the Fairview Club was growing rapidly, reaching a membership of eighty girls, with Ruth as president for two years. They took sewing lessons, with the result that they made their own clothes. Recently they had a contest, giving a prize to the girl who designed, bought, and made the prettiest dress for a dollar. The course in millinery taught them to make their own hats.

But the more vital parts of farm life were not neglected. The fruit and vegetables on the farm must be kept for winter months, and the club girls learned to can all of them. Ruth has such a collection of blue ribbons from community and western North Carolina fairs, that she has lost count of them.

But still the girls wanted to learn more. They wanted to know how to plan the proper meals for their families, and how to serve them. This year the Fairview club took as their project the planning, buying, cooking and serving of four meals, breakfast, lunch, dinner, and party refreshments. The meals were prepared and served in the Agricultural building of Fairview school. So successful had been the club's work in table service that they sent a demonstration team to the Fair. Ruth was a member of the team, and they won the prize.
