Editor Ashcraft Praises Cleveland-Wants Farmers To Raise Japanese Kudzu

Editor Eugene Ashcraft of the Monroe Enquirer passed through Shelby yesterday returning from a visit to Greenville, Tenn., where he went with 75 Union county farmers to inspect the huge milk condensing plant which is paying out to the farmers of that section $90,000 a week for butter-fat and when told that Cleveland county this year expects to make 60,000 bales of cotton, he said, "I do not doubt it at all. Cleveland is a wonderful county because it has some wonderful people," but our farmers are growing too much cotton.

Before introducing the subject of Kudzu, a Japanese bean which grows a luxuriant feed crop. Mr. Ashcraft had a bit to say about this section of North Carolina as a dairy section. "Of course there are many fine dairy herds around Greenville, Tenn., where the milk condensing plant has been established, but we would have paying dairy herds here if we would raise grasses and feeds. Those Tennessee farmers take care of their grass—that's why it pays so well. We could do the same and we will never find that dairying pays until we grow feeds. An acre of grass is worth more than an acre of cotton."

The Japanese Kudzu has been known to grow 10 tons of feed per acre. It will easily keep several cows and it is much better than lespedeza or alfalfa. He has been introducing it in Union county and has 25 acres just coming into use. Farmers travel 75 miles to see it under demonstration. Speaking of Kudzu, Mr. Ashcraft says:

"Kudzu is a Japanese legume, closely related to and having many of the characteristics of the velvet bean. Kudzu makes a most luxuriant growth, and it is not unusual for the vines to grow from 50 to 75 feet during the summer season. In fields it forms a thick mass, growing from three to five feet high.

Never Falls To Produce Crop.
"One of the peculiarities of the Kudzu plant is its drought resisting qualities. When other crops are ruined by dry weather, Kudzu remains green and flourishing. Root of the plant grow deep, and the land is thoroughly covered by a dense growth of vegetation, which prevents evaporation from the soil."
Kudzu Enriches Land.
"Kudzu is remarkable in that it is in a class by itself when it comes to reclaiming poor soils, filling gullies, and at the same time producing fine pasturage for cattle. It also is amazing in the manner in which it will grow on "cut over" lands, literally covering bushes and trees, affording grazing, where none before existed. When plants are set in deep gullies erosion ceases and within a few years worthless lands are reclaimed.

"Then, too, Kudzu prefers hilly or well drained lands. Apparently it will grow well on almost any soil, provided it is well drained. It will not do well on swampy or marsh lands. It will grow in sandy soils but seems to prefer clay.

How To Plant.
Mr. Ashcraft has experimented in numerous ways with growing Kudzu from seed during the past several years and now has about 25 acres growing. The most successful plan has been to prepare the land to a good seed bed. Plant peas, cane or soy beans. Then sow the Kudzu seed afterward, dragging a brush over the ground, or a roller. If Kudzu seed are planted even one-fourth inch under ground, they'll never come up. Better still, if the seed could be sown just before a shower, germination is assured.

When young the Kudzu plants are very delicate. Also a rabbit prefers Kudzu to anything that grows in the ground. Hence, peas or soy beans afford the rodent something to eat and gives the Kudzu plants a chance.
Do not get discouraged in growing Kudzu. It gets full growth about the third year on almost any kind of thin, well-drained soil. However, on good soils a fine hay crop may be had the first year.
Do not plant seed until all danger of frost is past.
It may be planted any time during the months of May and June, and as late as July.

Cattle Thrive On Kudzu.
Dairymen who have had experience with Kudzu, say it is perhaps the only legume that can be pastured and leave no unpleasant taint to milk or butter. Cows are particularly fond of Kudzu, either green or cured as hay. In fact, stock will eat Kudzu hay in preference to almost any other food.

Kudzu produces an exceptionally fine hay, in that there is no shedding of leaves, most easily cured and it does not pack or mildew when placed in the hay mow.

Foundation Of Farming.
Kudzu should be the very foundation of successful live stock farming everywhere in the South. It is the most productive and nutritious forage plant ever grown by man. It contains 4 per cent more protein than alfalfa and yields an average of five tons of splendid hay per acre, regularly, every year.

Stock never bloats on Kudzu, and all kinds of stock eat it greedily, either as pasture or hay, and thrive on it. It is a drought resistant and is wonderful as a shade and soil improving crop in orchards. Pecan trees can be raised to bearing age without any cost at all, for they grow faster with Kudzu and no fertilizer or cultivation than they do when heavily fertilized and cultivated. Two or three crops of hay can be cut every year or it can be pastured by two or more cows per acre all summer.
