OH, GUS! CERTAINLY NOT! LISTENING TO A GREAT ARTIST IF IT DOESN'T ABSOLUTELY AGONIZE YOU?

Discover Cavern In A Tenn. County

Cavern With History Of Years Is Located Only 20 Miles From Boone.

Watauga Democrat.

There is, as many of our people know a spring near the Grant home on upper Roans creek, in Johnson county, Tenn., known as "Fish Spring," out of which older people of the community say, before and since the civil war, myriads of cave fish, at a certain season of the year, came out and followed the spring branch to Roan creek. An elderly gentleman of that section was heard to relate this some weeks ago to the editor of this paper. Those were the days of iron forges, when a tiff hammer was used to draw out the bars when the heated metal was taken from the furnace. It required quite a number of men to operate a primitive iron plant, one of which was located near the Fish Spring, a watering place for the laborers. The owner of the forge found that in many instances, the workmen, after slaking their thirst, which was rather often—forging was very hot work—they would lose time catching fish or watching them emerge from the earth, making their way to freedom in the ten sparkling waters of the historic creek. Accordingly, in order to stop this profligacy of time, he ordered that a lot of cinder from the forge be hauled and poured into the bowl of the spring, which was done. The water continued to flow, but never afterward was a fish known to come out of the spring.

When a boy this scribe was very much interested in this story and he, with a cousin, Mr. Sam Rhea, who also had an ambition to explore what we believed to be a great subterranean cavern, set about to investigate. At the foot of the great boulders a miniature lake of considerable depth. Young Rhea, the real explorer, made for himself a small boat and with paddles in hand started on his voyage. But lo, when he had gone only a short distance, his lakelet contracted and there his hopes failed him. The world-be discoverer knew of a hole on top of the mountain several hundred feet above. We had rolled great stones into it, and listened to their bounding from side to side until at last they made a clear drop to the depths below. In after years, large stones and even rails and logs were chunked into the yawning hole until it was choked some distance down, being explored later on by Bruce, now Dr. Rhea. He went down on a windlass far, far below the surface, but was unable to pass the obstruction.

But back to the story. The state highway commission of Tennessee got permission from Dr. Rhea to set a heavy rock crusher at the foot of the limestone cliff to provide rock for the surfacing of the road. The machinery had not been in place long ere the steam drills had cut their way deep into the solid limestone and the further they cut the more convinced were they that a cavern was just ahead. All summer they have pounded away, finding sometimes a hole in which was found well defined stalactites and in one instance the workers found the heavy bones of some animal 24 feet below the surface and about the same distance back in the cliff. The week before last a heavy shot was put in and it was decided that Sam Rhea and Bob Rivers were prophets a half century ago when they said, "There is a cave and a lake in there if they can only be located." The last shot revealed an opening of considerable size with heavy lime formations hanging from the arch above, and among them some of as pretty specimens as have been taken from the world famed caverns of the Valley of Virginia. There are leads off in the bottom of the hole, that it seems from the top, a man could easily walk into, by the powder had so shattered the stone that to go down before more is done, seemed to hazardous for any man to take the chance of making explorations. Yes, it seems that ere many days work have been done, a cavern of resplendent beauty and a real lake teeming with fishes will be revealed to the human eye. Its progress is being watched with great interest by many people. It is only 20 miles from Boone, right on the highway.

Epidemic Of Rabies.

An epidemic of rabies has threatened the residents of Concord and that section of the state. Twenty persons in Cabarrus and adjoining counties are known to have been taking the Pasteur treatment to ward off the dreaded disease. These persons all came in contact with Charles Furr, a midland farmer, who died at Concord a few days ago with hydrophobia.
