At The Theatres

"She Goes To War," starring Eleanor Boardman, is the Armistice day offering at the Webb. The picture will also be run tomorrow. In addition to this feature the bill will also include a Pathe all talking comedy, and other attractions. Rupert Hughes wrote "She Goes To War," and United Artists produced it. Henry King was the director. It is the drama of woman's service at the front. It is a gigantic war romance, featuring the best woman player in Hollywood for the lead. It is a splendid picture.

What promises to be an event extraordinary and one sure to establish a new precedent in the way of genuine merriment, surprises, laughter, fun, revelry and all around entertainment is the latest Mut and Jeff sensation. Mut and Jeff's Honey-moon. This brand new comedy with music, of which so much has been heard from during the past few weeks, comes to the Princess theatre, for matinee and evening performances, the matinee starting at three o'clock on Wednesday, November 13th.

"The Four Feathers," a great picture is on the program at the Princess for today and tomorrow.

WHY LAWS CANNOT AID THE FARMER

In the Raleigh News and Observer last week Uncle Walt Mason wrote of the grief and woes of the farmer in a most interesting style, as follows:

The farmer's lot is full of grief, and laws can't bring him much relief, for everything he plants or sows has forty million vicious foes, and laws don't kill the bugs and worms, and the destructive slugs and germs. And all the elements conspire to worry, persecute and tire the patient farmer as he strives to prosper as the town man thrives. We see him planting yellow corn upon a bright and vernal morn; and then he cultivates the same until exhausted is his frame; we see him busy in the dawn, and hustling till the day is gone, and when the end of June is here, his fields most promising appear. He views the noble spread of green and feels contented and serene. And then there are no further rains and baking winds sweep o'er the plants, and all the corn turns dusty gray, the crop is ruined in a day. And all the laws we may obtain can't bring a single quart of rain. And all the statesmen in the land as pale dum-mies stand when south winds, with their torrid breath, to growing things bring sudden death. But if a drought should not arrive, the crops may for a season thrive; but when they're ripe and fit to reap, the floods will hit them, four feet deep. Day after day the rain will fall, when for bright skies the farmers call. The helpful statesmen vainly try to make the weather good and dry; in vain they talk and legislate; the farmer has to pay the freight. Disease attacks the farmer's swine when they are getting fat and fine; his hens quit laying at a time when being eggless is a crime. And all the laws in force to-day won't make an old hen start to lay. The ills that make the farmer yelp are ills that statutes will not help.

Yeah?

Sambo says that not long ago he stopped in the antique shop and sat on one of those badly worn horse hair sofas, and now he understands why grandma wore five petticoats.

People in different parts of China do not speak the same language. Well, they probably would not have anything interesting to say if they did.
