

Park Avenue Turned Into Cow Path
As Ohio Woman Milks "Bossie"

Mrs. Irving Bastian Milks Cow in Park Avenue

A $15,000 cow standing in the middle of Park Avenue at Thirty-sixth Street, was milked by an Ohio farmer's wife. Neither the cow nor the farmer's wife, Mrs. Irving Bastian, of Clyde, Ohio, seemed to think the affair was any great shakes. But to the several hundred New Yorkers gathered around, who had an idea milk came in cans, it was an interesting exhibition of the ways of nature. The cow's name is Successor Sultane. The blue blood of the Isle of Jersey courses in her veins. She arrived in the metropolis from Mt. Kisco by truck. She wore around her neck what is believed to be the oldest cowbell in Ohio, brought to New York especially by Mrs. Bastian for the Fall dinner of the Ohio Society at the Hotel Pennsylvania. Once or twice, as Successor turned her placid eyes toward the gaping throng, she emitted a mild and pleasant moo. When no one returned her greeting, she bent her head and tried out the stubby grass of the Park Avenue mall. She even consented once to moo for the talking newsreel boys. Mrs. Bastian did not wear what is popularly supposed to be the correct milking costume. She had on a blue ensemble. All she did was remove her coat and gloves, sit on an overturned pail and start to work.

At The Theatres

A shadowy eyed menace who has thrilled audiences in many moving pictures has a part in Adolphe Menjou's "Fashions in Love," which will show at the Princess theatre starting Thursday for two days. She is Rita LaRoy and she does an effective job of vamping the sophisticated screen star.

"Light Fingers," starring Dorothy Revier, screen beauty extraordinary, and Ian Keith, is today's offering at the Webb. It's an all talkie, Columbia picture. The story shows how love turns a crafty crook into a big time detective—a real thriller, good entertainment. "Father and Son" is tomorrow's picture, with Jack Holt in the lead. Described as "a battle of human emotions between a vicious, designing woman for her husband's money and her step-son for his father's love."

Cotton Market

Cotton was quoted at noon today on New York exchange: Jan. 17.74. Yesterday's closed 17.66.

Journal of Commerce Memphis, Tenn., says decline in spot cotton to lowest of the season stimulated demand from spinners and stiffened resistance on part of owners. Basis higher. Sales for the week in south 166,000 bales against 162,000 previous week, and 245,000 last year, and 153,000 bales year before.

Houston Texas reports better tone. Desirable cotton scarce, basis up, export demand brisk. Charlotte reports high basis cuts sales beyond December. Mill offerings too low. Bedford reports mills turning to low grades. Forecast fair cast cloudy west. Favor long side on reactions. Trade orders should average up to cover hedges.
