Scanty Clothing On Stage Losing Lure Says Critic

Paris.—The undraped female figure no longer pulls crowds to the theatre, says Louis Le Sidaner, writer and critic, but the prime cause of music hall failure, he adds, is "to much America."

Five music halls have closed or gone over to the movies. The three principal ones that remain are busy inventing new kinds of jazz in an effort to keep their box offices open.

Americans, and also English, Le Sidaner explains, do not come to Paris to see what they see at home and the French much prefer their own to foreign brands of entertainment.

He admits theatrical directors think otherwise and that most French playwrights and players are trying to turn out the American variety of song and dance.

Often entire scenes are given in English. Also most of the good choruses are English or American, because the French girls appear to have too much "individuality" to kick all together.

The much overworked bathing girl and the short-skirted woman also are blamed. Bare legs have ceased to have mystery for the public and seashore costumes give a general idea of the figure of the modern Venus.

Therefore, says Le Sidaner, the public tired of half clad show girls, particularly as the specimens lining to parade in undress wear at always of transcendent beauty.

When the slate is wiped clean, and the theaters "resort art and elegance," Le Sidaner feels sure Parisians again will go to the box offices and foreigners again will pay to see something distinctively French.

AN IOWA YOUTH CROSSED HIS PATH

If Albert B. Fall Could Have Read The Future He Would Not Have Sold Newspapers

A dozen years ago a young Iowa lawyer, Carl McGee, went to New Mexico for the sake of his consumptive wife's health. He realized it would be slow work to build up a legal practice there so he looked around for something else to do.

He heard of a small newspaper that was for sale. It was owned by Albert B. Fall, then U. S. Senator, which Fall had picked up in a business transaction. McGee bought the paper.

At that time Senator Fall was the political boss of New Mexico, and a boss-ridden state it was. Thinly populated, largely by ignorant, easily managed "greasers," state lent itself naturally to the rule of a small political ring of which Fall was the king pin.

The more McGee learned of New Mexico politics the more he thought a cleanup was needed so he opened a hot fire in his daily paper on the political ring. Fall warned him but McGee chose to defy the senator and at that time Fall was an exceedingly dangerous man to defy. But the Iowa was a fighter toady and he hung on.

At the stage of the hostility; the odds were entirely in Fall's favor. His political power in the state was almost absolute. McGee was poor and a stronger, but possessed of chilled steel nerve. The fight became so hot McGee feared for his life and carried a gun. Then followed a shooting scrape one day in which McGee was quickest on the draw and killed his attacker. McGee was acquitted on grounds of self defense.

While politically powerful Fall was not wealthy. He owned a large ranch but it was in a sadly rundown condition. Taxes on it had fallen in arrears. About this time Fall was appointed secretary of interior. Then oil scandals "broke" but nothing at first implied anything more than a misjudgment on Fall's part in granting the leases.

McGee learned one day that the Fall ranch was being restocked with cattle and extensive improvements were being made. Back taxes too had been paid up, he discovered. His suspicions aroused, he investigated further, then went to Washington with the amazing evidence he had uncovered.

The rest of the story is known to everybody—"the little black bag," attempts to cover up the $100,000 bribe from Doheny, sale to Sinclair of an interest in the Fall ranch, the oil trials and at last conviction. But what the public generally does not know is the part played behind the scenes by the young man from Iowa, Carl McGee, who tried to clean up the boss-ridden politics of a state single-handed. Congress might well recognize his meritorious service to the nation in some suitable way as it grants distinguished services medals to our war heroes.

Carl McGee is now a newspaper man in Oklahoma, forsaking the law permanently. What a prosecuting attorney he would have made!

Oil Magnate Tells Jail Experience

London.—Elinor Glyn, founder of the modern sex novel, and creator of that mysterious word "It," is in London again.

When asked whether she regarded the spate of sex novels which followed her notorious "Three Weeks" as a menace to youth, and whether her discovery of "It," or sex appeal, has not done more harm than good to girls, she replied:

"I do not believe that the 'sex novel,' so-called, has done any harm to the younger generation. Rather it has done good, and if I were to begin writing again I would not vary my subject or my style, because I write exactly as I feel and as I see life.

"I do not read many of the modern sex novels, partly because I am an old woman and old-fashioned and partly because I have to write eight thousand words a week still.

"But what I do see of the modern sex-novel makes me think that if they are not all, by any means, great contributions to literature and thought, they are at least an expression of the fact that this younger generation is determined to find out things by experience and practice rather than to rely blindly on precedent.

"I am an optimist as far as the next generation is concerned. I believe they will be a magnificent race.

"I am an optimist as far as this present young generation is concerned.

"They are not degenerate in the mass and they are not lacking in virility or common sense.

Show Common Sense. "If they have tried experiments they have soon found out which experiments did not pay in health or happiness, and abandoned them. That is common sense.

"Sex novels, as such, may not all be very entertaining, or even instructive, but I regard them as a period of evolution—expressions of the nervous unrest and questioning which the authors—and many of their readers—feel.

"As such they do not do any great harm, and they may conceivably result, indirectly, in a very great deal of good."

ACHING FEET EFFECT AMBITION AND HEALTH

Most Troubles We Have with Our Feet Are Due to Indifference in Buying Shoes, Says Authority, Urging Care and Annual Foot Examinations.

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D. United States Senator from New York. Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

If you mistreat your automobile and break its mechanism, you have no occasion to worry. The broken part can be replaced. Unless you are in an accident that takes you to police station, or the hospital, a collision does not amount to much. The repair shop will restore everything to working order.

Your feet are the chief machinery for the locomotion of your precious body. They are essential to your happiness and welfare. There may be artificial substitutes, but in the real sense there are no spare parts for this mechanism of locomotion.

Except when they hurt and ruin the pleasure of living, how often do you think about your feet? You spend a hundred dollars a year to keep your hands looking well, but what do you do for your feet?

You should give more than casual thought to these members. They are the very foundation of that temple of energy, the human body. You make a wreck of yourself by permitting sore feet to spoil your happiness. Nerves are put on edge and health undermined by steady pain, no matter where it is located.

Take care of your feet. Parents should see to it that their children are properly directed when they begin to walk. It is essential that proper foot gear may be provided from earliest childhood, as well as for adults to have their feet examined at least once each year. These examinations should be made by orthopedists, podiatrists or trained chiropodists. They are as important as examinations to safeguard the sight, the hearing and the organs of the body. This is the teaching of all those who believe that prevention is better than cure.

A great poet has written some verses in which the refrain is "Build me straight, oh Worthy Master," thus echoing the sentiments which every fond parent holds for the young for whose upbringing he is responsible. With the feet, the foundation of the body properly safeguarded, the material means for accomplishing this result are made possible.

Surveys made by the staffs of the foot clinics of New York and given publicity through the United States Public Health Service, show that 60 per cent of adolescent girls are more or less foot defective. It should be our aim to prevent troubles of this kind, and to correct them when they do exist. Then there will be fewer foot cripples. As a result, our citizens will carry themselves better, having normal posture, thus helping the race practically as well as bettering its appearance.

I marvel more and more that people buy whatever is offered in the way of shoes. They select their furniture, table linen, and evening garments with the greatest of care. But when it comes to shoes they are sadly indifferent.

If you prize your comfort and efficiency you will not neglect your feet. You will take care of them and clothe them only in the best fitting of shoes.

COMES BACK FOR DEGREE 60 YEARS AFTER HIS CLASS

Yellow Springs, O.—In 1869 a handful of students at Antioch college won their degrees and were graduated. It was a happy commencement, for it signified that although a great civil war had shaken the little institution to its foundations and almost caused it to perish when all the young men students left their classes to enlist, victory had come at last and the college would go on.

For one young man, however, there was a tinge of sadness. Hugh T. Birch, who had undertaken to finish the four-year course in three years, could not be graduated because he lacked completion of just one required course. Working his way through college, acting as captain and pitcher on a victorious baseball team, and doing four years of college work in three, were just a little too much.

He left for Chicago, studied law, and became one of the successful attorneys of that city.

Now, 60 years afterward, the faculty of a renewed and rigorous Antioch has voted to award Birch, his degree—the bachelor of science degrees as of the class of 1869. The college which has called education an "adventure," and which makes it so by providing its students well planned contacts with the realities of life, has seen that in this man's life the requirements have been fulfilled many times over.

Dean O. L. Inman, in presenting Birch's name to the Antioch faculty, pointed out that it was proposed to grant him, not an honorary degree, but a bachelor's degree, in recognition of intellectual work actually achieved and verified.

"I've been on Glen Helen with Mr. Birch," declared the dean, "and I stand ready to say that he knows his natural history. If he could not have met the requirements in 1869, he certainly can now. I only wish all students of today could be depended on to retain, 60 years hence, so large a part of what they have 'earned.' Birch has continued his education through the years, and possesses a rare knowledge in astronomy, entomology, botany, ornithology and geology, as well as a mastery of his chosen field, the law.

Recently Birch gave the college one of the most beautiful tracts in Ohio 700 acres adjoining the present campus, which has been named Glen Helen in memory of his daughter.
