Around Our 'OWN' Shelby SIDELIGHTS

By RENN DRUM

Shelby people, who became acquainted with him while he was feature writer for The Raleigh News and Observer, will enjoy, we believe, an article by Ben Dixon MacNeill in the current issue of the American Mercury. Some folks hereabouts sniff with disdain when they hear the name of the Mencken magazine, yet, after a perusal of it, this column will go on record that those who do not read it will miss an interesting article.

A couple of reasons why it is interesting: First of all, it is an article about North Carolina, entitled "The Report from North Carolina," and then it tells how prohibition is working in this state, citing numerous instances in high life—by that we mean political life and not particularly the fast-stepping jazz society.

It will be of especial interest... hereabouts that Governor Gardner is among those Ben Dixon writes of in his article, and it may be of additional interest that the governor is one of the few notables mentioned who has not taken a drink the narrator of how prohibition is working in the state famous for its "caw'n" liquid.

Incidentally, MacNeill and a Cleveland county writer, W. J. Cash, have advanced to the point where they are among the most consistent contributors to the Mencken magazine.

An advertisement in The Star during the holidays, and also to be seen along the highway, informed that Shelby desirous of purchasing fireworks could do so at "Little Mexico," a filling station east of town on the Kings Mountain road. That's a good name for any place having to do with fireworks, for in the real Mexico they must start their young off with pistols and shotguns instead of firecrackers and sky rockets.

This item may, and may not, be interesting to Shelby parents. The majority of the fellows coming home from college for the holidays spent their time going about calling on their friends and enjoying their vacation. Governor Gardner's eldest son, James Webb, who is a student at State college, came home with his parents to spend the Yuletide—and clerking in a local clothing store during the Christmas rush.

About town they are relating a mishap that came the way of Thos (Doc) Hooper, the fellow over at the Suttle drug store with the John Gilbert adornment on his upper lip. During the recent cold snap it seems as if Suttle's, along with the other drug stores was urging auto owners to purchase alcohol for their radiator to prevent their cars from freezing. On one of the worst nights of the cold spell Hopper insisted that every customer in the store should not take the chance of going without the anti-freeze. Just how many gallons he sold is not recorded, but he made many sales. After the store closed for the night he journeyed home, retired, and got up next morning to find that his own auto had frozen because there was no alcohol in the radiator.

The politicians get a few breaks in life. Instead of cussing the cigars they received for Christmas and dumping them in the ash can they, within a few weeks, may begin to pass them out to the ballot boxes in an effort to get things fixed up for the approaching primary.

Columnists over the country have since Christmas been telling their readers, if any, about the Christmas greeting cards they received. "Around Our Town" has no such intentions for most folks never read their own cards, and then, it would take too long for us to tell about all the cards we received—something like seven or eight. But there's one which must be mentioned. Along with the other things on the day before Santa slid down the radiator pipes came a little notice from Postmaster Quinn's Christmas card distributor telling of a piece of mail there on which postage was due. Calling and depositing the necessary two coppers the mail was found to be the greetings of the season from Louis Hamrick, the big press and clean 'em man. And we guess that's said property. The purchaser at this sale will take said land subject to said liens and encumbrances. This 11th day of December, 1929. O. M. MULL, Trustee.

SHARP EYED MAN, 83, LOCATES BIG BEE TREE

Dubois, Pa.—Earl E. Lettice is 83 years old, but his eyes were good enough to "spot" 11 bee trees last summer. He marked them and now his neighbors are eating the honey.

When wild bees rise after gathering a quantity of nectar they make a straight line for their nests, usually in hollow trees. For a man with good eyesight, says Lettice, it is merely a question of following the line until he comes to the bee tree.

It is often necessary to fell the tree to get the honey.

PARKER'S FRIENDS THOUGHT HE'D DIE

"Sargon did more for me than everything else I tried put together did in 23 years. My wife is taking the treatment on the strength of what it did for me and my mother who is 73 years old is always praising Sargon Pills!"

JAMES ROBERT PARKER

"I spent $2,000 trying to get rid of stomach trouble that pulled me down to where my friends thought I was going to die. My food would not digest right and double doses of calomel and other drastic laxatives only gave me temporary relief from constipation. My liver was sluggish and I suffered terribly with rheumatism. I have taken 3 bottles of Sargon along with the pills, my digestion is perfect, my constipation is ended, and there's not a rheumatic pain in my body! I am full of strength and energy and feel better than I have felt in 20 years."—James Robert Parker, 416 Brun Ave., Charlotte.
