

Around Our TOWN Shelby SIDELIGHTS

By RENN DRUM

Since the recent flops of the stock market numerous puns regarding the antics of the unfortunate investors have been related heretofore. One of the favorite spots where these stories are told is the brokerage room in the Royster building where the interested ones loiter and fidget about, all depending, while watching the new quotations go on the board.

A good many of the stories, said to be true, have local people as the central characters and, therefore, cannot be related with any degree of safety. Told here, however, this week is a story of an investor in one North Carolina city, which is said to be a true incident and is related by a reliable person. This investor had been called and called, and called again. He was getting to the point where his appeals for loans to cover margins were not meeting with the desired response at the bank. He finally concluded to get where his brokers could not call him. He journeyed out to the golf course, but by the time he was half way out on his first round a message reached him that he was being called again. The next day he decided to hang out at a pool room, where he had not been accustomed to loaf, but his broker managed to find him there and call him again. Almost in desperation he made up his mind the next day to go to church, where he had not been going much of late and where a meeting was in progress. Just as he was entering the front door, and as he started to find a seat, the minister was announcing the next song. It was "Jesus is calling. Tenderly calling—" and it was too much for the investor whose nervous system is said to have collapsed.

Spats are the rage among the stylish young fellows about Shelby just at this season. A few years back the shirt appearing on the streets of this cotton-growing center wearing spats would have been termed a "sissy," but some of the fellows wearing them now are entirely too husky to be talked about in such a manner. Introduction of spats here is accredited to Steve Woodson, dapper young advertising manager of a local clothing store, who believes in advertising his wares in person as well as in the display window and by newspaper advertising.

Many of the youngsters about town do not know that Dr. Royster once operated a drug store where the Tom Eskridge grocery now does business. Not long since the report came up from Georgia that Atlanta was shy on eligible young men and feeling as how fewer Shelby school teachers were married during the holidays this year than in many years there must be a similar shortage here. A rumor heard along local streets has it that Shelby banks have a very effective method of supporting Governor Gardner's live-at-home program, the plan being to refuse loans to farmers who will not agree to grow their own hay and feedstuff in addition to their cotton crop. The biggest seller in the intoxicant in Shelby nowadays, according to officers, is not South Mountain "brown" but rubbing alcohol purchased by the bottle and diluted. Henry Massey, local hardware dealer, says that if Cleveland farmer make as much cotton next year as they did this year without growing more feedstuffs, the county will go
