Around Our TOWN Shelby SIDELIGHTS

By RENN DRUM

warmanananananananananan

Out on the gold coast, at San Francisco, there is a reporter who recently experienced a thrill the feeling of which is well known to this department. He has found the long lost Charley Ross-again. Some four years ago we had the similar pleasure.

THAT NIGHT will long be remembered by this colyum, and by tive-born. N. C., and all persons having claims hundreds of newspaper readers hereabouts as the story kept Shelby fied to present them to me proper- in the headline the world over for several weeks. Accompanied by a be pleaded in bar of their recovery. Asheville, the writer after some search located the little shack and therein heard a remarkable storythe undersigned. This January 1, one of the most remarkable we've ever listened to as boy and man in news-gathering racket-and from one of the most unusual men we've ever met. Long since we dis carded the idea that Julius Dellinger, who later visited his friend, Uncle Frank Gaffney, in Shelby was the Philadelphia boy whose disappearance was a world-wide ation; Dellinger, however, had a story pieced together of his life that for a time had the world believing that he was none other than Charley Ross.

Just where Dellinger is now is not known. Wherever he is he will still contend that he is the Philadelphia boy kidnapped out of a big fortune and he will scoff, as we do, at the Frisco story, for it is our opinion that it will never do for the long lost Charley to be found. Many a reporter has received a big kick out of trying to find or "finding" Charley in days gone by, and this perennial opportunity to score a hig scoop should not be denied the news hounds of the future. We'll never entirely get over the hunch that, after all, Julius Dellinger might be Charley Ross-and the

NO TOWN on the map, in cur opinion, has ever boasted of two more likeable citizens of foreign blood than Shelby did a year or so back in George Symrnios and George Scordas. The former died somewhat suddenly about a year in reply: ago and Shelby turned out one of greatest funeral throngs as a The final tribute to "George," the playmate of all Shelby children and the And he said in ghoulish glee: close friend of every Shelby citizen. A PECULIAR angle of this poli tical setto between Furnifold M. Simmons and Josiah W.
