Turns Tables. El Paso, Tex.—Federico Guerrero, Juarez, Mexico, celebrated his attainment to manhood by spanking his father, but he still claims the score is far from being even. "Papa, I whip you now," said Federico. "Many times you made it hard for me to sit down" when I was a kid. I don't like that, I was a good boy."

With those words, Federico picked up his father and spanked him. Guerrero, sr., had his son arrested on a charge of assault.

Around Our TOWN Shelby SIDELIGHTS

By RENN DRUM

SHELBY JUST seems to be one of those places where public speakers of ability are produced. There isn't any necessity of running over a list of the town's outstanding orators, yet since Emancipation Day, on January 1, for the colored folks any number of people about town have commented upon the fact that Shelby has some able colored speakers as well as white ones.

THIS COMMENT centers to quite an extent about the speech of Rev. John A. Hunter, one of the town's best known colored men. "Clyde Hoy, Max Gardner or any of the others would have had a task excelling the oratory of John that day," Mr. W. B. Nix says. "And John was pretty clever at tying in illustrations and jokes with the trend of his speech," he added.

The speaker, he said, laid particular emphasis on the fact that the negro cannot get anywhere unless the white man stands by him. To illustrate his point the speaker related the following episode: Some years back a colored man who lived near a flag stop on a main line railroad wanted to catch the train at that point. Journeying there he was informed that the train would stop only when flagged and would not stop then except to pick up white passengers. In a nearby field the colored man noticed a white man working. He walked over and asked the white man to come stand by him near the tracks until the train came along.

"I don't want to catch the train," the white man remonstrated. "That's all right, boss," the negro said as he heard the train whistle, "just come stand by me a minute, please."

The white man walked over and stood by the negro at the tracks, and the negro waved frantically to catch the engineer's eye. As the train reached them the brakes screeched and it came to a dead stop. The negro crawled on, the white man went back to his work, and the train pounded on down the rails. Down the aisle came the conductor.

"Where's that white man who got on with you?" he asked the negro. "Boss, he warn't goin' nowhere and he didn't get on; he were just standing by me."

"That's about the only way," declared the Rev. Mr. Hunter that "us colored folks can expect to progress—with the white man standing by us."

WHILE THE topic centers about the colored people it is recalled that a building and loan official of Shelby recently made the statement that he has had it proven to him that colored people, for the most part, prefer to pay rent rather than to own their homes because of the worry connected with home ownership.

According to the B & L man an assistant of his purchased the homes of three colored families because they could not keep up their Spartanburg.—Samuel N. Miller, 60, of this city, traveling salesman for the Chesterfield Milling company, Asheville, is in a hospital here suffering from probably fatal injuries sustained when his car was struck by a C. New York.—The new edition of the British "Who's Who" says that Colonel Lindbergh married Elizabeth, daughter of Dwight Davis, U. S. Ambassador to Mexico.

MAJOR McBRAYER, a native of Shelby now living at Portland, Oregon, the country Arthur Brisbane says is the greatest section in the world, has some praise for "Around Our Town" in a letter to the boss. All of which is greatly appreciated, particularly because it was addressed where it should be the most good from a selfish standpoint, but in his letter the major notes that he isn't personally acquainted with the conductor of the corymb—and that, perhaps, explains everything.

ANY NUMBER of Shelby people tune in their radios each night on W. K. Henderson, the Louisiana scandal-monger of the air, but insofar as we can observe not a one of the chain stores in this section
