

UNEARTH LARGEST TOMB IN EGYPT

Eleven Other Burial Places In The Vicinity Promise To Yield Treasures Of Own.

N. Y. Times.

Egypt's latest archaeological discovery is the largest burial chamber as yet unearthed beside the River Nile. Reports from the excavations at the foot of the Sphinx, not far from Cairo, tell of the opening of a great mastaba, or oblong tomb, two stories in height, 500 feet long and 100 feet wide—a palace of the dead containing 80 compartments and 30 labyrinths. It is the final resting place of Ra Ouer, "Intimate friends of the King, master of the royal robes, master of ceremonies, barber of the king, well beloved of the king."

The new excavation is the first spectacular achievement of an expedition recently sent out by the Egyptian university under the direction of the native Egyptologist Selim Bey Hassan. Ra Ouer's is one of twelve tombs the expedition has found to be in the neighborhood of the Pyramids and from which great treasures are expected.

A sample of the riches promised is an enameled necklace containing 4,000 gold and lapis lazuli beads, said to be largest necklace ever discovered in Egypt. But for a fortunate accident, this would have gone the way of so much of the wealth buried with the ancient Egyptians—it would have been taken by grave robbers. A skeleton, with the hand missing, found beside a mummy's coffin, is taken to be that of a thief arrested by the fall of heavy masonry as he was making off with the jewelry.

The tomb of Ra Ouer is the second of unusual proportions that the Nile Valley has revealed of late. The other was the reward of the University of Pennsylvania's first expedition, at Meydum, some fifty miles further up the river. The University of Pennsylvania group is engaged in investigating the "false pyramid" of Seneferu the first really great king of Egypt, which was the third of the great pyramids to be completed and now occupies a position in the midst of the sixty-mile stretch of royal cemetery on the west banks of the Nile.

With a human chain to pass up the debris accumulated through 5,000 years, and progressing only a fast as safety allowed in the foul inclosed air, the excavators came upon a great chamber of evenly laid stones measuring 320 feet by 160, with forty individual graves, their rectangular coffins thought to date mostly from the fourth dynasty. According to a report in January, twenty sarcophagi had already been taken out.

The discoveries, eight years ago, in connection with the tomb of Tut-ankh-Amen served to fix the public mind on the excavation work that goes forward in ancient Egypt. But discoveries had been made before. The tide of European antiquity-collecting turned with force upon Egypt in the nineteenth century.

Howard Carter, the finder of King Tut-ankh-Amen's tomb has spent forty years in the Valley of the Kings seeking out the remains of monarchs of thousands of years ago and the accompanying objects by which the life of their period is to be reconstructed. For six years he searched all Luxor for the boy king before that day in 1922 when the removal of a boulder near the mouth of the valley showed him that his search had been rewarded. It was he who had already revealed the tomb of Thotmes IV, the valley temple of Hatshepsuth, the tomb of Amenhotep I, the cemetery of the eighteenth dynasty queens and the cliff tomb of Queen Hatshepsuth.

Among Egypt's Tombs.

From the beginning of the twentieth century, agents of universities and museums in England, America and Germany and private explorers have busied themselves among the tombs of Egypt. Before the World War the German Oriental society did distinguished work in the Nile country.

The Metropolitan Museum of Art has been engaged in Egyptian excavations for twenty-three years. Thebes, on the upper Nile, has been the scene of its major activities, among the tombs of nobles and the ruins of palaces dating from 1600 to 1200 B. C. It has practically finished its work on the Temple of Mentuhotep and the cemetery to the north.

Last year it reported the discovery of the tomb of Queen Meryet-Amun, daughter of Thotmes III and wife of his successor, Amenhotep II, dated from about 1440 B. C.

The territory that has been worked over for the last few years by the Harvard-Boston Museum expedition adjoins that in which Ra Ouer's tomb is situated, in the neighborhood of the pyramids of Gizeh. Its outstanding find is the tomb of Queen Hetepheres, wife of Seneferu and mother of Cheops, builder of the great pyramid, which was opened in 1926. It is thought that Queen Hetepheres' tomb was originally elsewhere and that it had been broken into.

Independent At 65 And How It Is Done

Gastonia Gazette

At the present time when there is apparently some distress due to unemployment, it is well to have brought to our attention the great value of systematic saving and thrift in providing for one's old age.

Some interesting figures have been worked out by the American Society for Thrift showing how one may become financially independent at the age of 65. It is to be assumed that most persons are able to maintain an income until they reach this age at which time most of them feel that they would like to retire and take life easy for the rest of their days. It is true, of course, that no rule or formula can be laid down that will apply to all cases but it would seem that a plan which calls for a modest amount of saving during one's productive years and provides an income of $100 a month after the age of 65, would come close to filling the requirements of a vast number of people.

It would require the sum of $30,000 invested at 4 per cent to provide a $1,200 annuity. If one should begin saving at 21 years it would only be necessary for him, according to the American Society for Thrift figures, to lay aside $259.34 a year to achieve this financial independence at 65.

The following figures will show the age at which one may begin saving and the amount necessary to be saved each year until one reaches the age of 65 in order to have an income of $1,200 a year thereafter: twenty-five, $15.70; thirty, $47.32; thirty-five, $34.90; forty, $72.36; forty-five, $1,007.16; fifty, $1,498.24; fifty-five, $2,498.72 and sixty, $5,536.82.

These estimates are based on savings being deposited in a bank or invested at 4 per cent compounded annually. It is more than likely that during at least a number of years the average man could increase his savings above the schedule here referred to. It is also possible to get better than 4 per cent. This would mean either that one would not have to wait until 65 before retiring or that one would have a larger income than $100 a month after reaching that period in life.

There is indeed no surer way or better way of providing for a comfortable old age than through some such a plan as has been here briefly outlined.

PATHS OF HUGHES AND TAFT TOGETHER

Crossed Often. Hughes Parents Wanted Him To Be A Minister.

New York—Charles Evans Hughes disappointed his parents.

They hoped he would be a minister, as his father before him.

It wasn't until he was 19, with a degree from Brown, that he set his face away from the pulpit toward other solemn places.

Since then, career has swept him up to many climaxes, the last the peak of a lawyer's ambition, chief justiceship of the United States supreme court.

Once before he donned the somber robes of this court, but in three days he sat at the foot of the bench, appointed by the man whose place he now takes.

Long before he became a public figure lawyers knew of him as an adviser, and when New York City began an investigation of its gas companies Hughes was selected as its field marshal.

That successful fight started him on his public career. Soon he was governor of New York and re-elected in 1908. From this post he was called to the supreme court as an associate justice by Mr. Taft, then president.

He left the bench to campaign against Woodrow Wilson for the presidency and was defeated, although at one time victory seemed certain.

Defeat left him no small figure on the national scene.

He served as secretary of state, as a leader in the Washington arms conference and even in recent more private life has held important judicial positions, including that of special master in the tangled Chicago lake diversion controversy. He is, too, a member of the court of international justice sitting at the Hague.

In many curious ways the paths of Hughes and Taft have crossed.

There was Hughes-for-president boom back in 1908 which collapsed under Roosevelt's insistence for Taft. Again in 1912 he refused to be a candidate against Taft.

There were reports, when Hughes went to the highest bench, that he expected the chief justiceship, then vacant, but instead Taft as president elevated Justice Edward D. White to the post.

He married Antonette Carter in 1888, and joined her father's law firm. To them were born three daughters and a son, Charles Evans, Jr., who resigned his post as solicitor general when his father was named chief justice. One daughter is dead.

Middle Life Suffering

"Three years ago, I was in bad health," says Mrs. J. B. Bean, of Kirbyville, Texas. "I was going through a critical time, and I suffered a lot. My back hurt almost all the time, and my legs and ankles ached. My head hurt me until sometimes I would be almost past going. As I had used Cardui before, and knew how much I had improved after taking it, I got a bottle and started taking it. I continued to use it for several months. After a while I regained my health, and I feel that I could never have gotten through that awful time without Cardui."

Broadcasting For Cows.

(From The Los Angeles Times.)

And now we hear that radio is being installed in barns for the benefit of cows. It makes for contented cows and makes more milk and butter. This is radio brought down out of the air as it were and devoted to something practical.

At that some announcers we have heard would make good cow-calmers. However, no disrespect is intended; for it is a new and risky profession that calls for more delicate and high-priced qualifications. A new announcer of national proportions has just been imported into San Francisco at $80,000.

That's Different.

One day a very pretty young lady who had a poodle dog in her lap chance to be riding on a street car. A blunose lady sitting next to the girl addressed her thusly:

"My, what a nasty little dog! Don't you think, my young lady, I would look much nicer if you had little baby in your lap."

"The pretty one reptile in calm even tones, "it wouldn't. You see I'm not married."

Striking Similarity.

Visitor—There's nothing the matter with this country. All it requires is better type of settler and a decent water supply.

Resident—If you come to think of it, those are the only drawbacks to Hades.
