Several in Massachusetts, including the seats now held by Republican leaders Treadway and Underhill, who were elected by small margins in 1928.

In Connecticut, a determined fight is planned against the Republican floor-leader, Tilson.

Some political watcher less partial believe that a gain of the 52 necessary is unlikely, but that the gain may be enough to give the Wisconsin independents a balance of power, creating a difficult situation for the administration in which the Wisconsin members might regain from their party leaders the committee chairmanships and other prerogatives taken from them because of their party irregularity.
