Full Garbage Pail Tells Family Flaw

Wickles Wamboldt, in Charlotte Observer.
 A family that owes nearly everybody in the town where they reside does these things:
 They let their car stand for an hour with the motor running because to shut it off is too much trouble.
 Often when they go out evenings they leave the lights burning all over the house and the radio going. Sometime the radio is on all night, and if any one mentions it the family laughs about it as if that were a joke.
 They let their ice box stand open for half an hour at a time rather than shut it between trips.
 Milk sours because it is not placed on ice. Other foods spoil for the same reason.
 When they fill up the furnace winter mornings they leave the drafts open and permit most of the heat to go up the chimney. Then they fill up the furnace again. They never trouble to adjust the dampers—in fact, they have never learned how to adjust the dampers.
 A small rent is left unattended until it enlarges and destroys the entire piece.
 During the summer the winter clothing is never put away from the moth; and during the winter the summer clothing hangs around exposed to smoke and dust.
 Through extravagance, neglect and misuse, this family wastes enough to put themselves on easy street.
 Most of our cities, towns and states manage their affairs just about as this family manages theirs.
 There are leaks in a thousand different places. Dollars are spent where dimes would do. Two persons are employed where one would serve better. Extravagant prices are paid for supplies, equipment and labor. Breakage and wastage go on unchecked.
 There is a multiplicity of ways in which economies could be effected without impairing service. Probably there is not a municipality or a county or a state in this Union in which expenses could not be constructively cut 10 to 50 per cent.
 If city, county and state governments could be induced to submit their annual estimated budgets to business experts for analysis, they would be surprised to see the extent to which they could reduce expenses, and the public could be delighted and oh, so grateful!

Senator Boomboom Starts Drive

Washington.—Senator J. Boomboom McWhorter is waging a not campaign for renomination and reelection and if he is not returned by huge majorities it will be because his constituents are nowhere near as dumb as the senator thinks they are.
 He has a very impressive slogan, "McWhorter or Chaos," and his strategy is based on the idea that whereas in most election years a candidate need only kid the voters along, this is a year requiring hard-headed resourcefulness because if the voters cannot actually be scared into voting for McWhorter they are likely to go off voting for someone else.
 Most of the voters in the senator's state are farmers who have lots of work and no money and laboring men who haven't any work or any money either. McWhorter found when he got home never be allowed to shave or take a bath.
 "Think how small your own debts are as compared with the Germans who owe the rest of the world fifty billion dollars."
 "In Italy the earthquakes would swallow you up and streams of molten lava would come down the hill to seal your tomb."
 In Rumania you would not be much better off because the population that it wasn't any use trying to paint the clouds with sunshine.

the radio, however, he has confined himself mainly to the flag and what it means.
 It need not be supposed, though, that McWhorter has been lacking in constructive suggestions. For years he has labored for legislation on behalf of the farmers which would make the corn borers eat up all the boll weevils and the boll weevils eat up all the corn borers. His latest proposal is to turn both the borers and the weevils loose on the wheat crop so as to eliminate the surplus which everyone wants to be rid of.

Agonies Of Drug Users Comes Late

Suffering Comes to Addict Not in Getting Habit, But in Breaking
 The Golden Age
 Drug addicts do not suffer while they are contracting the habit. The suffering comes when they try to break away from it. The agonies of an addict when his supply is exhausted passes the power of human speech to describe. The pains are said to be like a sword thrust through the body.
 Household furniture has been hastily sold at two cents on the dollar of valuation just before the expected visit of the dope peddler. Demons appear before the eyes. At a convention of the California Anti-Narcotic League held in Los Angeles two women, in tears, told of their horrible sufferings when they began to do without the drugs to which they were addicted; and another fell to the floor in a faint when she began to try to put it in words.
 In another instance the mere thinking of what she had suffered caused one woman to faint and fall into a profound coma. In advanced cases the results of deprivation of the drug of addiction, called "withdrawal symptoms," are considered the most acute tortures ever endured by man.
 The drug of addiction will quickly relieve this torture, and hence the addict comes to feel that the getting of his supply of the drug is a matter of life and death. The mental sufferings and anguish are commensurate with the physical sufferings. The fear of having to endure the pains of "withdrawal symptoms" makes the addict a perfect slave to a perfectly heartless master.
 A normal person cannot possibly appreciate the anguish of mind that comes to an addict as he sees his own helplessness and realizes that his morals and principles and even his body are disintegrating, causing untold suffering to his family and friends, and the scorn and hate of society.
 There is no cure for drug addiction. Narcosis was given a thorough trial on 318 cases in Bellevue hospital, but it was found that it did not alleviate the withdrawal symptoms, but aggravated some of them, and that following its use there was no obliteration of craving for narcotics.
 Abrupt withdrawal of the drug of addiction is dangerous to patients and has been known to cause death. A gradual withdrawal over a period of fourteen days is considered the most efficacious and humane means of helping one to break the habit. Many cures supposed to have been effected have turned out to be not permanent. Men have several times asked magistrates to commit them to prison for a term of years, in order to free themselves from this embrace of living death.

SAVE SWEETHEART
 Cambridge, Mass.—Harvey Firestone would save guide, sweetheart and himself from the desert. In a speech he revealed that he had given 100 per cent to the boy who answered Edison's quiz in that fashion.
 BACK TO THE STAGE
 New York.—The latest in the procession back to the stage from the talkies is Basil Rathbone and negotiations toward the same end are being conducted with Gloria Swanson.
