Gives 26 Reasons Why Students Fail

High Point.—Having had the subject of college students' failures under his observation and study for more than 10 years, Howard Spessard, dean of men of High Point college, has compiled 26 reasons why many college students fail in their work and in their professional careers after they leave college.

The points are not listed in order of importance, and overlapping the repetition occur in order to prevent any oversight in interpretation.

1. Have no definite goal towards which they are making an earnest effort to reach.
2. Improper proportion between work and recreation.
3. Overemphasizing extra-curricular activities.
4. Underestimating the value of extra-curricular activities.
5. Over-balancing social life with school life.
6. Failure to keep physically fit.
7. Choosing wrong associates.
8. Specializing too soon before they are sure they are being fitted for a particular occupation.
9. Not adapted to college life because of mental or moral characteristics.
10. Failure to recognize that one gets out of life what he puts in it.
11. Failure to realize the importance of prompt and regular attendance to classes and other activities of the school.
12. Failure to participate in and become a part of the general school life.
13. Too little of the proper kind of study.
14. Developing habits which prove detrimental while in school and while out of school, or after leaving school.
15. Failure to realize a sense of responsibility and debt to self, parents, school and to society.
16. Not using native ability to full capacity.
17. Too little reading and study outside of the regular required work.
18. Lack of integrity, initiative, ambition, stick-to-it-iveness, courage and thrift.
19. Selfishness and egotism.
20. Inferiority complex.
21. Enter college too young.
22. Not sufficient rest and sleep at night.
23. Not sufficient meticulous attention paid to seeming minor and unnecessary details.
24. Improper high school preparation.
25. Insufficient amount of serious and reflective thought.
26. Inability to weight values, i. e., to distinguish the important from the unimportant.

Rich Man's Whim Creates Child Fairyland

Wealthy New York Manufacturer Reproduces in Real Life in New Jersey Estate, Gingerbread House Which Hansel and Gretel Found in the Enchanted Forest.

THRILLING STAIRCASES IN GINGERBREAD HOUSE. CLOSE-UP OF HOUSE OUT OF FAIRYLAND

(By Alice Alden.)

New York.—Fairy tales sometimes have a way of coming true, despite this matter-of-fact world of ours.

Do you remember that delectable gingerbread house with a cake roof and sugar windows that looked a trifle battered after Hansel and Gretel had made a meal from it? Of course you do. And if you have seen Humperdick's delightful opera "Hansel and Gretel," you have no doubt admired the gingerbread house in the second act of that delightful fantasy. It was designed by Joseph Urban, the famous scenic artist, and into it he put all the dreams, all the longings, that he felt as a little boy when he read of the historic visit of Hansel and Gretel in the enchanted forest.

One evening a wealthy New York manufacturer, F. H. Bennett, of Hamburg, N. J., went to the opera, and right there on the stage was the gingerbread house of Hansel and Gretel. And Mr. Bennett, too, carried back to carefree childhood days, there and then decided to create a gingerbread house of his own, wherein children could play and make fairy scenes and dreams come true.

The Bennett dream palace is only fifty miles from New York, but it is as fantastic and beautiful as though it really had been built by fairy hands. It is a perfect reproduction of the Urban gingerbread house and is all complete, with cake-icing turrets, candy-stick towers, sugar windows, marble-cake walls and grills of plum pudding. Its sugar-frosted roof is a landmark and draws children from far and near, who run up and down its fantastic stairways with banisters made of figures of Hansel and Gretel. And they hide in the witch's cauldron and then rush up another staircase made of elephants holding each other's tails in their trunks.

When Mr. Bennett decided to build his dream house to make the heart of childhood glad, he consulted with Urban who had designed the gingerbread house for the Metropolitan opera. It took a score or more of experienced artisans more than two years to build and furnish the wonderful house. It is constructed mainly of poured concrete painted in all sorts of enchanted hues, and wherein children could play and with sugar hearts. Of course there isn't any witch within the magic house and so children, scores of them, make merry within the fantastic walls from eight-thirty in the morning until five at night, by which time all good boys and girls should be homeward bound for supper.

The gingerbread house on the Bennett estate is a mecca for grown ups who have remained children at heart. The drive for many miles just to visit the little house with its turret and candystick towers. Sometimes they bring children with them, but very often they come alone these grown-ups, who look wistfully at the Bennett creation, happy that they decided to believe in fairies. And Mr. Bennett finds increasing happiness in the whim that led him to reproduce a bit of Never-Never Land for children, both young and old. His rewards is the music of happy voices as youngsters make merry within the gingerbread house that is the favorite spot of every fortunate child who has ever visited it.

Some men are nuisances and others are amateur magicians.

Says G. O. P. Will Lose With A Wet

Anti-Saloon Head Forecasts "Battle Royal" Campaign; Opposes Referendum.

Washington.—A prohibition "battle royal" in the 1932 party conventions and defeat for the republican party if its candidate shows wet leanings was the forecast made behind the closed doors of the national temperance council by F. Scott McBride, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon league.

The 100 dry leaders present subsequently condemned by a unanimous vote all proposals for a national referendum on prohibition.

Law Body Deliberates. Meanwhile President Hoover's law enforcement commission put in a full day of deliberation as to what it shall report about the dry law, and in still another quarter of the capital a small group of wet advocates, met in a "national constitutional convention."

The name of Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, former assistant attorney general in charge of prohibition, and now counsel for a grape concentrate concern, was inserted into the discussion of dry leaders in the form of a motion inviting her to address them.

The council, however, declined to consider the proposal and the motion was tabled.

Cannon Protests. Bishop James Cannon Jr., added his voice to those opposing support by the drys of a prohibition referendum.

From Sibley hospital, where he has been ill several weeks with arthritis, Bishop Cannon wrote Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington, secretary of the National Temperance council that it "would be an inexcusable betrayal of trust" for him to support such a move.
