At The Theaters

Connoisseurs of beauty and personality are unanimous in their praise of the new Venetian actress of the screen, Elissa Landi, who plays opposite Charles Farrell in "Body and Soul" today and Tuesday at the Carolina. Miss Landi, a born performer herself, draws Farrell out into the most dramatic role of his career. Entertaining, interesting and marvelously enacted, are words that would not describe too well the story and the doings of the all-star cast.

Dorothy Mackaill is growing more and more popular among Shelby picture fans. She is here again today and Tuesday in "The Office Wife," a picture that has been anxiously welcomed since its release date a few weeks ago. With the able support of Lewis Stone, the picture promises to treat the titled subject with due effect. Added to the bill are cartoon comedies. Wednesday, this week, "LummoX."

Bert Lytel, famous star of "Brothers," is reaping more stellar fame from his role in "The Single Sin," Tiffany production with Kay Johnson, at the Lyric today and tomorrow. Tom Tyler's "Phantom Rider" and Universal news reel are more features on the program. Chick and Andy, black face twins, will entertain in person on the stage after each performance. Buck Jones for Wednesday.

Held as Witnesses In Strangling Mystery

New York City police authorities are still seeking a solution of the murder of Vivian Gordon, whose strangled body was found in Van Cortlandt Park. John Radeloff, attorney (left), and Samuel Harris, alias Cohen, ex-convict, were arraigned in Bronx, N. Y., Supreme Court as material witnesses and held in $50,000 bail each.

GARDNER SHOWS ABILITY, STATE FOLLOWS LEAD

(C. W. Hunt in Mecklenburg Times) People are generally slow to follow an unknown leader, but when a man has shown that he has ability to lead and to know his way the people will follow his lead. I have direct reference to Governor O. Max Gardner, and the fact that he showed that he could lead and lead safely by transforming his home county of Cleveland from just an ordinary farming county to the first cotton growing county in this state, and even before he ever held office. Not by loud talk and sorry example, but by doing himself the things he told other people to do. He discovered early in his farming life that it did not pay to be stingy with fertilizer if you wanted a crop. He taught liberal use of medium priced fertilizer rather than a costly manure. I said he completely changed the farming condition in Cleveland by the sheer force of leadership that came to him almost unbidden. That being so, when he came to be governor at the very beginning of a recession in business and a demand for more economical government, there was nothing strange about his having such a following in the reforms he has centered on.

Last night I heard his radio address on his plan to combine the university of North Carolina, the College of Agriculture and Engineering and the North Carolina college for Women, under one great head and call it all the University of North Carolina, and I want to say it was a masterful presentation of a just cause by a master of language and a full knowledge of his subject. He will perhaps have more opposition in this radical departure than anything he has sprung, but any fair minded man needs only to hear and think on these changes to see there will be economy as well as improvement and co-ordination by consolidating the whole higher educational system under one great head, all working in harmony, yet occupying their present plants at Chapel Hill, Raleigh and Greensboro. That done, the highways of the state worked and built by gasoline tax money, the public schools run by other than land tax money, it will be written in the record that no legislature ever wrote such changes in fundamentals in one short sixty day session. The time has come for economy to be the watchword of all public expenditures; and anything short of that would be criminal. A weak man would have cowed under the opposition that has been set up against all these changes, but not so with the man in the mansion at Raleigh. He knew his cause was not only right but was demanded.

It is possible that the constitution of North Carolina is as far out of date as it is possible for it to be, and as much in need of being made up to date as were our tax methods of laying on poor farm lands to work roads and run schools. With city governments and state governments there cannot be other than duplication in effort, all of which comes out of taxpayers. But let no one get into his or her head that these reforms are going to make some one a living without work. The changes will be found a great relief from a killing burden, but every man must work. These readjustments simply point the way to better days. The wise thing to do is for every man, woman and child old enough to work, get busy with the idea of making something for self this god year, especially those in the country. Grow food for man and beast; be content with a little; be satisfied with your present state if possible, working with the idea of taking care of self, for in doing that there will be something for the man with another kind of job. It cannot be too often repeated: "If you farm to make money you will fail; but if you farm with the idea of making a living first, you will (in the end) make money."
