THE BLASPHEMER.

I have lived my life in vain,
For I scorned the common-places—
Saw no glory in a face,
Smiling on a bed of pain.

Trembling hands at simple tasks,
Tolling for a bit of bread—
Haughtily I flung my head—
"There is more than spirit asks."

Faint I heard the broken bars
Of the tollers, ready mirth;
While my feet tripped on the earth
I was lost among the stars.

What a poor, blind fool was I,
Thinking life a blasphemy.
Life is living, now I see;
I would live who am to die.
