

Globe Circling Tours and Sub-Arctic Voyage Planned

Daring Deeds Scheduled for This Summer Surpass in Adventure Any Told of in Realms of Fiction by Versatile Pen of Jules Verne

BERNT BALECHEN, JULES VERNE, SIR HUBERT WILKINS

New York.—This summer will usher in many voyages of adventure, surpassing in thrills any tales told in the realms of fiction. In describing the undersea boat "Nautilus" in "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," Jules Verne visualized a truly wonderful craft. With remarkable precision this noted French author, years before they became a reality, carried us through the realms of adventure—thrilling and unbelievable. He told of the many hardships overcome by daring adventurers in his thrilling tales of voyages by land, sea and air. Little did he dream that in later years these masterpieces in the annals of fiction would be written in the pages of reality.

In a modern "Nautilus," a former U. S. Navy submarine, reconditioned and refitted, Captain Sir Hubert Wilkins plans early this summer to make the 3,000-mile undersea journey, when he sails under the North Pole.

This daring Australian has made four trips by airplane to the polar regions, each of which is filled with tales of adventure far surpassing any told in the pages of fiction. "Around the World in 80 Days!" When the versatile pen of Jules Verne prompted by an active brain produced this masterpiece, little did he dream that aided by science man would traverse Mother Earth in far less time. John Henry Mears, who, in 1929, set a record of circling the globe in 23 days, undaunted by the mishap at Harbor Grace in the gray dawn of the Fall of 1930, is again forming plans to lower the record of the Graf Zeppelin, which, under the guiding hand of Dr. Hugo Eckener, made the trip around the globe in 21 days.

Bernt Balechen, who accompanied Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd in his flights across the Atlantic and over the South Pole, plans to fly in a tri-motor airplane from New York to Nova Scotia across the Atlantic to England, through the Moscow and Japan, and will attempt to cross the Pacific at Nome and back again to New York in one of the thrilling adventures scheduled for this summer.

Around Our TOWN Shelby SIDELIGHTS

By RENN DRUM.

Shelby's municipal election campaign is getting more and more like the town clock. And that must be hard on the candidates—nobody can tell the time of day by the old tick-tocker that no longer ticks.

Some of the fellows about town who still rate as "the boys" wonder how many remember when street carnivals were held in the street in front of the present location of the Cleveland drug store? Or when a high diver put on his thrilling act at the present post office location? Or when a balloon ascended there and everybody thought the balloonist far more daring than the young generation considered Lindbergh's feat?

Somebody's holding out on this colyum. The national industrial board says that the per capita wealth of North Carolina is $1,737. Which is to say that every one of us should have that much. Wonder how big a club the colyum could organize of those of us who are wondering who has our part?

This one may bring on a swift kick in the pants or a caustic chiding, but, since we've started looking back into the past and peeping into scenes many have forgotten, it will stir too many memories to be withheld.

Approximately 31 years ago this week a rising young lawyer-editor of Shelby, Clyde Roark Hoey, and his bride just a few days were buggyriding in the section to the south side of the court square. A piece of paper fluttered, or something like that, and 'ol Dobbin took to his heels thoroughly frightened. At the southeastern side of the square the young groom was hurled from the buggy and the runaway horse shot on down the street lickety-split with the bride holding on for dear life. Over where the First National is now was the town hotel with a front porch. As the runaway reached that point gallant gents jumped rapidly for the bride of the frightened steed. But too late, a wheel of the buggy struck the porch and the young bride was catapulted from the buggy and painfully injured.

In those days a runaway horse or team of horses in the business section caused considerably more excitement than a falling airplane would nowadays. They were events that were talked for weeks thereafter. And great old days they were, huh?

Hold just a minute, please: Aileen Walker, a "hello" girl whose appearance matches the voice over the wire, is nominated in the Miss Shelby contest.

Shelby Shorts: Some of the entrants are wondering when the winners of the most-beautiful-girl and best-looking-man contest will be decided. Well, who's going to make the decision? Certainly not this corner; it would be far more dangerous than naming the ugliest woman and the meanest man. Meantime the list is open for new candidates. Comes a card from C. C. F., of Fallston, who is at Washington, saying as how times will be getting better soon since he's been up to see Herbert. Joan Crawford back at a local theatre. That goll certainly has ways about her. Two good revivals in town. Grownsups, filled with the spring spirit, tossing a baseball to and fro along the South Washington street business curb. One peewee golf course open and a big marble game still going on the other. General expression about town of the hope that J. J. McMurry, veteran Shelby business man wintering in Florida, soon recovers from his attack of flu. Too many men of his type haven't been made yet. The sign over Joe Nash's new store adds to the pep of the LaFayette street business section. One Shelby banker smokes cigarettes and few of the others smoke at all.

This is to be a war story, a true incident of the World war as it happened to two Shelby vets.

Back in '18 when the Big Berthas were booming, and men were fighting and dying, an American M. P., a Shelby boy, was strolling on his beat up in the heart of the action, just behind the front line. An infantry column came along. The commanding officer left word that one company was behind and apparently lost, and ordered the military policeman to hold the company when and if it did come up until an artillery column had passed and moved into position. Then the artillery column came long. Shortly thereafter the lost infantry company came into sight. The M. P. stepped out to the front truck on which the captain, a big, husky fellow, was riding. "You'll have to wait until the artillery gets by. You can't break into a column," the M. P. shouted at the captain. "Like h—, I can't," shot back the infantry captain. "Who are you?" "I'm an M. P., and I have orders to hold your company until the artillery moves up, and I'm going to."

The big captain fumed and raged but halted his tired outfit. Finally the artillery column was gone and as the infantry dropped into line the captain stormed out at the M. P. Both soon forgot the incident. Things—big things—happened over there too frequently for that to linger long in the memory of either.

Months passed and rolled into a year. It was Christmas 1919 and the boys were back home. Two vets, dressed in their civvies again, turned a street corner and bumped into each other. As they shook hands one paid particular attention to the other's voice. Back flitted his memory. "Say, you, do you remember an M. P. stopping your company one night at such-and-such a point?"

"I sure do, darn him," replied the former captain. "He got me cussed out for coming up late. Why, you bloomin' bozo! It just now comes to me that you were that M. P." And for some time they talked over that eventful evening.

Which is showing you again that the world isn't so very big after all. The M. P. of the story is now one of Shelby's best known young men. He sells tailored suits. The captain, a native of the Sharon section, is in the wholesale grocery business at Houston, Texas.

That ought to be enough for today.

Ellenboro Class In Junior-Senior Feed

(Special to The Star.) Ellenboro, Mar. 24.—The junior-senior banquet for the Ellenboro high school students was held last Friday evening in the local school building when a delightful social meeting was given to both the students and the members of the high school faculty.

At the close of the banquet Professors Rice, Nanney and Bushong of the high school faculty gave the students instructive and inspirational talks. Miss Glenn Philbeck of the junior class toasted the seniors at the beginning of the banquet while Mr. Jesse Harrill of the senior class responded. Mr. Carl McKinney of the junior class served as toastmaster.

The room in which the banquet was held was appropriately decorated with green and white, the senior class colors.
