

Nobody's Business
By Gee McGee

Mike Is Mighty Mad.
Flat rock, s. c., April 7, 1931.
dear mr. editor:—
I am writing this letter so's I can clear up my good name concerning a report which was put out by bill jones who owes me $4 for beef and won't pay same that I make my wife out all of the stove wood ansforth.

to annybody who knows bill jones, it is not necessary for me to deny this fact, as he is such a liar, his own dog won't believe him when he jumps a rabbit and says here, rover, here.

bill passed my house the other morning in an old ford which he swapped his bonus for and saw my wife chopping off the head of a fine hen which she was a-fixing to have dinner, and he started that lie from that.

and the next day, bill come down to borry 4 or 5 of my coon dogs and he saw her out at the wood pile seeing if my awe was sharp, and he went off and told it again that she had cut the wood as well as cook and feed and milk and fetch in water.

I suppose if he waster see my wife looking out across my fine patch of corn which is knee high for rosin years, he would trot off and tell it here and there that she had to do all the plowing, no man ain't no better to his wife than me unless he has been married only a few days.

the first thing bill jones knows, I will pop him with the law for slauder and mallis aforethought, he wouldnt know the truth if he waster stumble over it and fall down stairs, his own wife has to ask him if he is asleep after she hears him snore.

the main reason bill is telling things on me is—he expects to run aginst me for kurriner of this county 2 yr. hence, and he stands about as much chance beating me as hoover does being elected our next president, his oath ain't been worth much since he was ketched selling whiskey once. mr. editor, rite or foam if you hear anything else he has said and then come to his funeral the following day by his pasture at reboher.

yores trulle,
mike Clark, rfd.

A True Story

If you want to make a man cussing mad, refuse him credit at your store. But if you want to make a man fighting mad, credit him at your store and then send him a dun or two—after his account begins, to sprout whiskers.

Free Advice

A man asked me the other day how was the best way to get rid of insects, I told him to quit voting for them for the legislature.—(Calcium arsenic and Paris green are also satisfactory if you can get them to eat it.)

Cotton Letter.

New York, April 8.—Liverpool came in lower than due and so did Bombay. It rained in Texas last week, hence the weak spots. Boll weevils have been found in Louisiana, and so has graft; therefore, the pros and the cons are negative and minus insofar as the longs and the shorts are concerned, but southern selling will no doubt adjust July to a new low in sympathy with the Muscle Shoals bill. Seeding without guano is going on in some sections, but we still have a mighty good civil engineer at the head of our government, hence, go ahead and sell and take your medicine.

Chapter 1.

Pardon a personal reference, but being a wholesale grocer, I want to tell you something. Our firm bought a car of Irish potatoes a few days ago from Idaho, which, of course, is a long way off. The potatoes (32,500 pounds) cost us $228.00. The freight charges on this shipment amounted to exactly $400.64, and the commission merchant and the broker got something for selling them to us.

Chapter 2.

And while it's none of our business, the railroad rates are practically the same rates that became operative during the World war. The railroads cannot get the sympathy that they really deserve—because they are using every weapon known to business in their fight to oust trucks and buses—except the right one, viz: Competition. What the public wants is service at a fair figure. Loyalty helps, but the Interstate Commerce commission has not yet cuts its eye-teeth. If I owned a railroad and had to run trains anyhow, I believe I would lower my rates and haul something occasionally.

Chapter 3

We are living in a new era. We are drifting back to a "profit on volume" basis. Railroads are being forced to maintain a high union wage schedule while they are discharging thousands of union workers and converting them into loafers. If they would cut rates and wages in keeping with the times (which they must do sooner or later), they would fare better in the long run, me thinks. The longer they put off doing this, the worse off they will be, so says experience.

Recognition Of Boiling Springs College From Raleigh Authority

(By R. L. Bolton.)

A recent communication from the state department of education to Prof. J. D. Huggins states that Boiling Springs is on the state's accredited list of junior colleges. A similar communication to President Wall from Dr. Thurman Kitchin of Wake Forest college was referred to in a recent issue of The Star. This simply means that Boiling Springs junior college is recognized by both the denomination's senior colleges and the state's senior colleges as doing standard work for which its graduates are duly credited when they pass to the higher institutions of learning.

As a junior college Boiling Springs is just a baby. It is laying its foundations well. The days ahead look exceedingly bright. Unless a school is supported by taxation or is the beneficiary of some very generous philanthropist it must have three things to assure its future. There must be a great need for it, it must be located among a people who are numerically and financially able to support it, and they must believe in it to the extent that they are willing to give their support. Boiling Springs junior college is not supported by taxation. No great philanthropist has yet risen to endow it. However, the thousands of Anglo-Saxon people of this immediate section know the need of this school, they are well able to care for it, and they have the will to do it. Boiling Springs junior college is not supported by taxation. No great philanthropist has yet risen to endow it. However, the thousands of Anglo-Saxon people in this immediate section know the need of this school, they are well able to care for it, and they have the will to do it. Boiling Springs junior college will gradually become a second Mars Hill. I think the sentiment of Cleveland county towards Boiling Springs can be stated in the words of Judge B. T. Falls who has been a trustee of the school since its birth: "Boiling Springs high school has wrought an incalculable influence upon the social, religious and economic life of the people of this section. As a junior college it is destined to occupy an equally large sphere of service. Our people are able to support it. It is now a full accredited junior college, with a wholesome, sound, religious atmosphere surrounding it. It demands in this hour the full and hearty support of our people."

A few evenings ago, in conversation with Dr. Zeno Wall, the president, he told me how he had dreamed of certain things in his planning and praying for this great section of North Carolina. He told how when he came to the First Baptist church of Shelby, that he dreamed of a great church auditorium and a great Sunday school where hundreds and thousands would be blessed by Bible teaching and Bible preaching. He has seen that vision.

realized. He spoke of dreaming of a great revival which would touch deeply the entire life of Shelby and richly bless Cleveland county. He has seen that vision realized in the wonderful revival through which the First Baptist church has just passed. Then, he spoke of dreaming of a great junior college, high in all of its standards, giving the best training possible, well equipped as to buildings, distinctly Christian in atmosphere, seeking and enlisting in its student body the hundreds of fine young men and women in the rural districts of Cleveland county, giving them the best at the lowest cost, and then sending them forth, many to the higher institutions of learning, and others back to their homes in Cleveland county to carry on as farmers and business men. Dr. Wall spoke of a junior college in Cleveland county like Mars Hill, near Asheville. That vision is yet to be realized. I believe it is going to be just as fully realized as the other two visions. It will take time, but it is going to take place. Dr. Wall seeks to find the will of God. In the doing of His will we never fail.

When Wray says there's value in the air, Men for miles around sit up and take notice. This Spring Wray says, more firmly than ever, men's clothing prices are clicking like nobody's business. Wray clad men will step forth in gay colors, completely discarding the somber tones of winter. There are checks and plaids to be worn, grays and browns and mixtures of light shades. These fabrics and their styles are developed to put the wearer in a more cheerful frame of mind. Like a new song hit, a new cigarette pack that "takes," Wray's clothing for men tells the whole story of style, and the very magnitude of these economy prices will set a new standard of clothing value for men of Shelby and the community. See for yourself.
