New York's "400" Dwindling Away

Mrs. Sara Gracie King Bronson Iselin Had Ancient Ancestry. Set Society's Rules.

New York.—When funeral services were held recently for Mrs. Sara Gracie King Bronson Iselin, "queen" of New York society, there were but few there who were of the one and only "400". She died in her sleep in her apartment. She was 80.

Descendant of a long line of colonial families, Mrs. Iselin made her own standards for society and refused to sway from them. During the last 25 years she did not add a name to her invitation list.

Rufus King, minister to the Court of St. James before the United States had ambassadors, was an ancestor. Her grandfathers were William Duer, president of Columbia more than a hundred years ago, and Archibald Gracie, whose home overlooking the East river is a museum of New York life and manners.

Mrs. Iselin, who ruled society in the '80s and '90s, was renowned to a family of illustrious persons. Her father was Archibald Gracie King, known as "Mr. King of Weehawken;" her sister, Mrs. John King Rensselaer, founded the Colonial Dames of America.

In 1875 when she was Miss Sara Gracie King, she married Frederic Bronson, lawyer and president of the New York Coaching club, and for 15 years thereafter her social decisions were unquestioned.

Aside from personal qualifications, the list of requirements for the socially eligible included aristocratic ancestry and wealth to maintain it; a house in New York, a place at Newport, villas in France and Italy and a lodge in Scotland.

The 400 grew to thousands, but Mrs. Iselin looked severely on those she called "social intruders."

It was as Mrs. Bronson that she held sway over the 400. When her husband died in 1930 she went abroad and four years later married Adrian Iselin, banker.

Mrs. Iselin had a daughter, Eleanora, who died in 1914. She was the wife of Lloyd C. Griggs, former American ambassador to Italy and Brazil.

Mrs. Charles Coble leaves this afternoon for Gastonia where she will join a party of friends and go to Charleston to visit the Magnolia gardens over the week-end.

Miss Mary Frances Carpenter returned yesterday to N. C. C. W. Greensboro, after spending the Easter holidays with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Carpenter. Miss Carpenter was injured in an auto accident coming home for Easter, and was delayed in returning to school.

Mr. Sam Perkins has resigned as manager of the Miller-Jones shoe store here and Mr. Perkins and his wife who have had rooms with Mrs. Gene Gamble left Wednesday. Mrs. Perkins and little son will visit relatives in Concord and Raleigh before joining Mr. Perkins at his new location in Washington, D. C.

City Board Discusses Improvement Plans

Although a quorum was not present when the city aldermen met in regular monthly session Tuesday night, those present discussed sewer and water extensions which are being planned, now that the city financial condition will warrant such an undertaking. Streets will be patched up and improved and a new tar and gravel road put down from W. Marion street to the cemetery.
