

Mayhew Blasts Three Homers; Shelby Defeats Kings Mountain

Shortstop Also Hits Triple. Shelby Wins Game 19 To Nine.

Shelby high's off-and-on baseball team found its batting eye—and how!—yesterday afternoon to defeat Kings Mountain there 19 to 9 as the Shelby team hit five home runs, three triples, and four two-baggers.

The record books fall to show that any such batting spree has ever been staged by a Shelby baseball aggregation.

Ken Mayhew, Shelby's husky shortstop, set the pace for the slugging slaughter with three home runs, two over the fence, and a triple. He topped off the three-homer and triple with a single to make three hits and five runs for the day. Albeck, centerfielder, and Carter, pitcher, also hit home runs. Duncan, catcher, and Barrett, outer gardener, hit triples, and McSwain and Deane hit doubles.

Blackwell, Kings Mountain hurler, hit a homer. Barrett with three hits ranked next to Mayhew, while Wilson and Albeck secured two hits each. Only Shelby player secured a hit for a total of 18 safeties.

Improvements are added to the Ford Car as they are developed, which gives the purchaser immediate benefit of the extra value which they represent.

Since the introduction of the Model A Ford, these include improved body and chassis lines, the use of Rustless Steel for exposed bright metal parts, smaller wheels with larger tires, plate glass for the Triplex shatterproof windshield, a new instrument panel and steering wheel, new body types, upholstery options, and many other features. These constant improvements keep the Model A Ford truly a value far above the price.

Baboon And Wolf Foster Children

Some 25 years ago the South African police in a barren stretch of country, came across a pack of baboons and fired upon them. As the men fired the beasts scatted; but one of them lagged behind and though he proved to be a slippery customer, was captured. He turned out to be a native boy that had been captured by the baboons while he was still a baby.

After a year in a hospital he learned to speak a little English, and in time disclosed the habits of his baboon friends. He had no idea of time, not even of the meaning of sunset or sunrise. He remembered how during cold nights one of the baboons had been in the habit of holding him in his arms, to shield him from the cold, and how they appeased their constant hunger by eating crickets.

When captured he was running about on all fours; but he learned to walk upright, and could run a ten-mile errand without stopping for breath. He could lift and carry two 100-pound sacks of grain. He had almost no memory, and was capable only of doing what he was told at the moment the order was given.

In the province of Oudh, India, in times past several native children have been adopted by wolves and been recovered to civilization. One such was found at Halwana, 75 miles from Allahabad, in 1927. The child was able to walk, but at times prefers to crawl, sitting on his haunches with his legs curled underneath him, and propelling himself forward with the palms of his hands on the ground. Having lived on roots and herbs for years, he even now eats grass when taken out in the evening.

At Chupra, India, in 1843, a man and his wife were out in their fields accompanied by their child, marked one one knee by a severe scald. The child was carried off by a wolf, and six years later was captured, after a fierce resistance, and plainly recognized by the mother as her child.

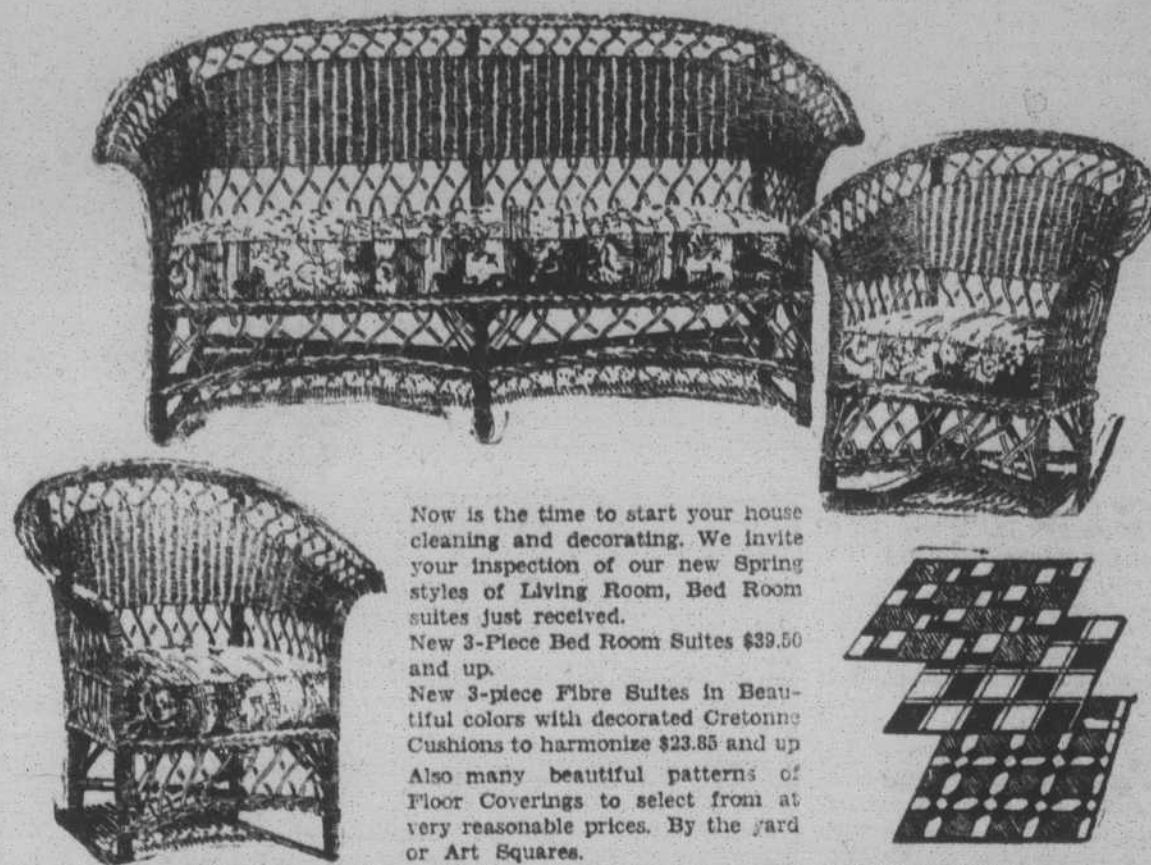

Several "wolf boys" have been kept at various times at the Secunderabad orphanage at Agra. One such was there in 1874, having then been there for nine years and supposed to be about 15 years old. His arms were but 19 inches long. Due to arrested growth, through his going on all fours.

It is supposed that these numerous "wolf children" in India have come about through the fact that in times of famine the parents in this part used often to abandon their children in the forests, and the wolves some years ago were very plentiful. The fact that the wolves kept these human babies instead of eating them show plainly the reverence which wild animals naturally have for humans, and the love of all mothers and fathers for child life in any form whatever.
