

No Fake Flowers Among Poppies To Be Sold In Shelby Saturday

Legion Auxiliary to Conduct Annual Poppy Sale For Disabled Vets

The little white label attached to each of the memorial poppies which the women of the American legion auxiliary will sell on the streets here Saturday is the public's protection. The label is the guarantee that the poppy has been made by a needy disabled veteran and that every penny paid for the flower will go to relief of disabled veterans, their families and the families of the dead.

The label, which is secured to the stem of every poppy, bears on one side the words, "In Memoriam," and the official emblem of the American legion and the American Legion auxiliary. On the other side it carries the names of the two organizations and the words "Veteran Made Poppy."

No poppy which does not bear this label is the official poppy of the legion and auxiliary. The label gives assurance that the vast organization of the legion and auxiliary stands behind the poppy, vouches that the flower is a veteran-made and pledges that the best possible use will be made of the money paid for the flower.

As a further protection for the public all women selling the legion auxiliary poppy will wear distinctive badges with the auxiliary's name in large letters. To make sure that they are purchasing an authentic veteran-made poppy and are giving the entire sum of their contribution to veteran relief work, Shelby citizens should buy their poppies only from women wearing these badges. Every auxiliary worker is a volunteer worker and every penny given them goes directly into the legion and auxiliary funds for the relief of the needy disabled and dependents.

Declares Daniels Sees Just One Side

Charlotte News.

The News and Observer continues to fawn at the feet of the Eastern group in the legislature and is so determined to make the industrial section of the state pay its tax bills. In answer to a comment by The Charlotte News in reference to the plundering attitude of the MacLean forces, Mr. Daniels seems to take the remark as a personal affront. He would have the public know that the contingent in the legislature that is seeking to shift the burden of taxes from their own pockets to the purses of Piedmont Carolina are "not plunderers but patriots."

Just so anybody has always been a patriot in the estimation of The News and Observer who cramped his mind into the narrow groove in which that newspaper habituates and anybody who thought contrarily was fit to cast into the outer darkness. It is not otherwise now. In the judgment of Mr. Daniels, there is only one side to this vexatious problem in the legislature and that's his side. He who dares to think in opposite terms may as well prepare to be vilified and castigated. That's his method of argument and debate.

Mr. Peeler Resigns At Double Shoals

Quits For a Rest After 24 Years With Double Shoals Store. Personals.

(Special to The Star.) Double Shoals, May 19.—The fine train that fell here last night will bring all grain up to a better stand. Mr. John R. Peeler who has been manager of the Double Shoals store for 24 years has resigned his position for a rest. In 1907 Mr. Peeler when a young man in his teens began working for the Morgans who owned the business. About 13 years ago the Morgans sold out to what is known now as the Double Shoals Manufacturing company. Mr. Peeler was retained and has been held in the same high esteem by the present company these years. He has many friends by his honest dealing, and a sense of regret will be felt by his retiring.

Mr. H. R. Royster who is secretary of the company and Mr. Loyd Cook will manage the store. Mr. Cook has worked under Mr. Peeler for some one or two years. The Sunday school hour has been changed from 9:45 back to 9:15 every Sunday but the fourth. On the fourth Sunday the hour is 2 p. m.; preaching 3 p. m.

SCOTLAND YARD TO TRAIN WOMEN OF POLICE FORCE AS DETECTIVES

London.—The feminist movement has won even Scotland Yard. It is learned that women police will now be trained in the intricate work of crime detection, and the Commissioner, Viscount Byng, intends to transfer them to the criminal investigation department as part of his 1931 scheme of reorganization.

New detectives will be recruited from the ranks of the existing women police. By the end of the year it is expected that there will be twenty-five fully trained women plainclothes detectives with the same status as their male colleagues. The women detectives will have unique opportunities in dealing with expert shoplifters and other women criminals.

No Proposal.

"Did you hear that Miss Spinster was squeezed so hard that several of her ribs were broken?" "Do tell. Was it a proposal?" "No, a bargain rush."

Miss Madeline Elliott, student secretary of Meredith college, Raleigh, spent the week-end here as guest of Mr. and Mrs. Fields Young.

Mrs. R. E. White and little son, Robert Eugene, of Winston-Salem, arrived at Earl last week to spend a month with relatives in the county. She will come to Shelby the latter part of this week to visit her sister, Mrs. George Washburn and Mr. Washburn.

Friends of Miss Minna LeGrand will be distressed to learn that she is in the hospital in Raleigh with measles.

Friends of Dr. A. Pitt Beam, who was in the Shelby hospital last week, will be glad to know that he was able to return to his home on Monday and is back at his office today.

Tar Heel Frog Loses In Jump

Washington Entry Looks Husky But Is Washout In Jumping Contest.

Angels Camp, Calif.—Somewhere in the crowded pages of sporting history the name of Budweiser, the 1931 champion jumping frog, must go down, if for nothing else than the thrilling comeback he staged to sweep the field in the fourth annual Calaveras county frog jumping contest here.

Budweiser's comeback was no cinch. The great mottled frog, who brought victory for his master, Louis Fisher, and renown for his home town, Stockton, Cal., was forced to run a gauntlet of roaring six gun, screaming men and women and goading children to win first prize with his leap of 11 feet 5 inches.

Budweiser strained those great legs that would make an epicure's mouth water to repeat his victory won in 1928. That year he defeated a much smaller field. This year he faced the competition of 150 others.

Four inches behind Budweiser came Puddle Jumper owned by John Decchenino of Oakland, Cal. Puddle Jumper managed to leap 11 feet 1 inch, while Joe placed third with a leap of 10 feet 6 inches. Joe Cesa of Antioch, Cal., owned Joe.

As representatives of the Kingston (N. C.) Kiwanis club released Zenobia, a king of frogdom if there ever was one, from his cage he leaped toward the starting line with the nonchalance of a great victor. Women screamed, revolvers cracked, and the town went wild.

Money changed hands quickly. Odds went up, but in comparison to the great Budweiser, Zenobia proved a dismal flop. He placed fourth with a leap of 8 feet 6 inches. Smoke the Washington (N. C.) fire department's entry, just couldn't get anywhere. He did his best at 7 feet 1 inch.

Twenty thousand persons jammed Angels Camp for the celebration. The town's one hotel was packed to the rafters. Murphy's Flat was a tent city. Beds were at a premium. The football in the hostelry's barroom cracked under the weight of heavy boots.

Prior to the contest charges were hurled unceremoniously. A group of California owners of blooded and pedigreed frogs charged Zenobia had been "hopped up" with a certain brand of liquid known only to the Sierra foothills. Ice containers were guarded zealously by trained frog keepers, and skullbangers were prevalent.

But it's all over now and Budweiser is the king.

Wilson Letters Found Unpublished

New York Times.

Woodrow Wilson, termed by some the most austere intellectual of presidents, is revealed as one of the most warm-hearted of sons in three hitherto unpublished letters to his father, obtained by Thomas F. Madigan, autograph dealer.

"To my precious father," Wilson attributed "the hereditary wealth I possess, that capital of principle, of literary force and skill, of capacity for first-hand thought." As his talents and experience grew, he realized more and more "the benefit of being your son." He recognized his father "as in a certain real sense the author of all I have to be grateful for. I bless God for my noble, strong and saintly mother and for my incomparable father."

Mr. Madigan terms the letters the most personally revealing documents he has ever seen by the late president, who seldom expressed himself so emotionally in writing—at least not in letters which have come into the autograph market. These were obtained from a friend of the Wilson family and are entirely in Mr. Wilson's autograph.

Tells Of Need For His Father.

That Woodrow Wilson considered his mind "a poor thing" and that it could not give him "gratification," he disclosed in one of the letters. "I have to rely on my heart as the sole source of contentment and happiness, and that craves, oh, so fiercely, the companionship of those I love," the future president wrote. The older he grew the more he needed his father, he said.

The first of the letters was written in 1888, when Woodrow Wilson was in his thirty-third year. The others were written during the next two years. At the time he was Professor of History and Political Economy at Wesleyan University. It was here that he completed "The State," an analysis of various national governments. It was in 1890 that he was called to Princeton as professor of Jurisprudence and Political Economy.

Just Too Bad.

New York.—Max Pincus has lost a smile that wouldn't come off and he has reverted to such an appearance as folks except a hearse driver to have. He had a lottery ticket on the derby. As a joke somebody sent him a telegram that he had won $20,000. He gave up his job and spent $100 on a dinner for friends before he was disillusioned. But he lost his job back.

Problem Of Choosing The Life For Students

Some Ten Thousand Gainful Occupations From Which to Choose—Summer Jobs.

(Special to The Star.)

Wake Forest, May 15.—Speaking this morning to 700 Wake Forest college students on "Choosing a Life's Work," Rev. John Allen Easley, college chaplain, gave his answer to a question which has perplexed mortals since the world began.

"The problem of choosing one's life work," he stated, "is one of the most serious which a college student faces. It has been said that 65 per cent of college students have not settled this question.

"The matter needs to be faced liberally by every college student. No one need expect to drift into his proper place in the world. On the basis of numerous surveys which have been made one is safe in saying that from one-half to three-fourths of the people in gainful occupations are misfits.

"Roger Babson says: 'Statistics show that 90 per cent of our young people get their positions in June or July, directly after the close of school or college When it is considered that most boys and girls take the first good position that is offered to them, irrespective of the firm or character of the work, it is not surprising that there are so many failures in life.'

"With possibly some 10,000 gainful occupations to choose from, every man ought to find a job to which he is suited. 'Each man,' wrote Emerson, 'has his own vocation. The talent is the call: There is one direction in which all space is open to him. He is like a ship in a river; he runs against obstructions on every side but one; on that side all obstruction is taken away, and he sweeps serenely over a deepening channel into an infinite sea.'

"One should hear the call of his natural bent, the thing he likes to do and can do well. But it is possible for a man's interpretation of his own aptitudes to mislead him. Of Goethe his biographer says, 'Till near his fortieth year he could not shake off the illusion that nature had given him equally the gifts of the painter and the poet. Many hours of the best years of his life were to be spent in laboriously practicing on art in which he was doomed to mediocrity.'
