

Queen of Fliers Ready For Solo Hop to Paris

It has been announced by Col. Clarence D. Chamberlin, the trans-Atlantic flier that Ruth Nichols, holder of the trans-Atlantic record for women and who recently achieved the speed record for her sex, will try to fly alone across the Atlantic to Paris early in May. Colonel Chamberlin is Miss Nichols' aeronautical adviser. The New York social register will use the "New Cincinnati" the same Lockheed-Vega plane in which she crossed the continent and set a new speed record at Detroit. Miss Nichols, will be the first woman ever to gamble her life in a solo trans-Atlantic flight.

At The Theaters

"Lonely Wives" is a four-star laugh special which opened this afternoon at the Carolina theatre for two days. Starred in the comedy are Edward Everett Horton, Esther Ralston, Laura LaPlante, Patsy Ruth Miller. There's a laugh line in "Lonely Wives" and chuckles in every scene. Friday—"The Spy" with Kay Johnson, Neil Hamilton, John Halliday.

"Stepping Out" is a comedy romance of amateur movie producers and their interfering wives. Charlotte Greenwood and Reginald Denny—both recently scored in "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath"—head the cast for "Stepping Out." The screen play is taken from the original stage success of the same name, and with a cast of five famous fun makers, promises lively entertainment for Webb patrons today and Thursday

SOCIAL NEWS

Children Of Confederacy Meeting Monday.

On Monday evening at the Woman's club room a regular meeting of the Children of the Confederacy was held with Misses Rachel Wells, Annie Ruth Dellinger and Dovie Logan as hostesses. After a short business meeting the program was opened with a solo by Miss Margaret Corbett, who was accompanied by Miss Sara Best. Miss Margaret Louis McNeely and Jessie O'Shields each gave entertaining readings, and two interesting articles were read by Miss Mary Tedder and Miss Jean Moore Thompson.

At the close of the program the hostesses served a refreshing ice and sweet course.

Jefferson Davis Honored By Nation

Boston Transcript.

Time was, and that not so many years ago, when the dedication of a statue of Jefferson Davis in Statuary Hall, in the Capitol at Washington, would have raised a great commotion. Even now there are doubtless some respectable members of the community who will be shocked by the quiet ceremony this week under the dome of the nation's great hall of legislation. They will regard the erection of a noble statue of the President of the Confederate States, in this sacred spot, as a surrender to treason, as a national scandal. Yet these people must now be few. It is probable that the majority of American citizens, in all sections of the country, will regard the proceeding not only with complacency, but with satisfaction. The Civil War is over. By settled custom, each State in the Union has a right to place in that hall two statues or busts of persons whom the authorities of that State regard as their most distinguished citizens. Mississippi is a State in the Union, on the same basis—now—as any other State. And certainly Mississippi never had a citizen more distinguished than Jefferson Davis. The dedication of the statue, which appears to be a good one, will raise the average of merit, both personal and artistic, of this curious old circular hall, which on account of the ugliness of many of its memorials, and the fact that a good many of the subjects of them have long since fallen into oblivion, has sometimes been called the "Chamber of Horrors."

In the days of the Civil War, and for some time afterward, a really monstrous opinion of Jefferson Davis was entertained in the North. He was the arch-traitor, the chief conspirator, against the welfare of the nation. When he was made a prisoner after the collapse of the Confederacy, thousands clamored for his immediate execution. No doubt he was generally regarded as a very bad man. But he was never a bad man. On the contrary, he was personally a man of high character and of blameless life. He was sincerely devoted to the doctrine of State rights—a fact which did not prevent him from being a lover of the Union up to the days when the final clash arose, and when he felt himself constrained to regard the attempt to suppress secession by force as a wanton invasion of the rights of the Southern States. As President of the Confederacy he fought the war to the best of his ability and with a merciful intention. Born in what is now Todd county, Kentucky, not very far from where Abraham Lincoln was born, in Hardin county, he bore, in character and quality, some traits that were like those of Lincoln. It was an interesting trick of fate that sent his father, Samuel Davis, to the southward, and Thomas Lincoln and his son to the northward, and arrayed these two Kentuckians, comrades of the Bluehawk war, against each other in the chief magistracy of their respective sections. Both men, as presidents, were bitterly opposed by some of their followers. Both were accused of inaction. Both, no doubt, had their faults. Davis' were those of vanity and obtuseness. But both were men of high ideals—both were statesmen and each one left a heroic record.

The name of Jefferson Davis is justly revered in the South today, and there is no reason why it should not be honored in the North. The placing of this statue in the Capitol, so far from being in any sense an irritation, should serve as a reminder to the whole country that the animosities which were aroused by the Civil War may now be buried in oblivion.
