Ex-Kaiser One Of Europe's Richest

Europe, hard-pressed by widespread industrial depression, can still display a considerable number of millionaires and multi-millionaires, according to a survey recently made.

The exiled ex-Kaiser Wilhelm, living in Holland, remains the richest German, and is believed to be richer than before the war. His fortune is variously estimated at from $37,000,000 to $62,000,000.

The Krupp fortune has largely vanished but two steel magnates stand out among Germany's richest men. They are Herr Flick, director of 15 enterprises, and Herr Fritz Thyssen, dominant in the Ruhr iron industry.

Quite a different industry is responsible for the fortune of Francois Coty, who takes precedent over the motor-car manufacturers, Andre Citroen and Renault, as the richest man in France. Coty made his money from scent and face powder.

Forty years ago, Coty, as a boy of 18, newly arrived in France from Corsica, found in a Riviera chemist's shop a perfume of rare beauty. He obtained the recipe, took it to Paris, and hawked the perfume from door to door.

Today he is a financial and political power in the land, and is reputed to have made more than $50,000,000 from perfumes and powder and has given more than $5,000,000 to charity.—Union Republican.

Time Corrected As It Becomes Wrong

How is time obtained? The earth itself is the fundamental clock, rotating once a day on its axis. But it is slowing down due to a friction of the tide, astronomers say, and the days are steadily becoming longer.

Furthermore, the earth is running irregularly, as indicated by shifts in our views of the moon. This is said to be due to expansions or contractions of the whole earth, or to shifts in the inner strata.

Due to these irregularities of the earth, earth time is not correct, and the error is calculated by observation of the time when certain stars reach a point due north or south, or when the moon passes before Mars and permits comparison with the spot the moon should have occupied at a given time. These corrections are made on the Naval Observatory transmission clock prior to its sending the noon time beats, which the Western Union network distributes to the nation.

A vital role in this distribution of time over the wire network is played by two greater master clocks and other recently invented apparatus placed in operation last week in a vault beneath the Western Union headquarters building in New York City. The two clocks are mounted on massive concrete pillars, but the four legs of each "float" on concealed springs which absorb any tremors of the earth. Each of the pendulums contains thirty pounds of mercury.

The temperature of the vault is automatically controlled. It will be necessary but rarely to open the vault doors and disturb the air within or to open the clocks because the clocks are kept in perfect synchronization with the time of the Naval Observatory by remote control. On an upper floor of the building, the beat of the seconds by these clocks and by those at Washington are recorded by a chronometer side by side in detail on a moving tape. The slightly deviation from the Naval Observatory time is immediately corrected by use of a switch, if any difference appears.

An important feature of the newly invented apparatus is a device which automatically flashes a signal each hour simultaneously over a large number of circuits controlling thousands of clocks. Another invention is a machine which automatically tests each of these circuits and prints on a tape the identifying numbers of any circuit requiring attention.

The synchronizing impulse may go to fire or police headquarters, the sidewalk or store window clock, or the factory, or it may sound the gongs at the local school, but practically everywhere we go and whatever we do, we may be sure of finding at our elbow Western Union time, identical to the instant with that at every other point in the country.
