High Priced Ball Players In Group

When the Chicago Cubs tried to secure Lucas, of the Reds, it is reported Cincinnati put a price of $250,000 on the pitcher.

When Walter Johnson discussed his great shortstop, Joe Cronin, he said the youngster was worth an even half million dollars.

When any group of baseball men discuss Babe Ruth they have no trouble deciding he is worth $500,000 to baseball.

With such valuations to go by it is easy to figure that an all-star team of present major leaguers would cost the buyer way over two million dollars.

If Lucas is worth $250,000 it is certain that Grove, Earnshaw, or Ferrell would bring as much or more. Mickey Cochrane, the greatest catcher of the age, would bring more than a quarter million, perhaps.

And if Cronin is worth half a million certainly an infield composed of Foxx, Frisch, and perhaps the youngster Vergez would run over a million.

If Ruth is worth $500,000, Al Simmons wouldn't be marked down below $250,000, and Hack Wilson at his best, or Chuck Klein, ought to bring as much.
