A VIEW OF SHELBY—OF THE AULD LANG SYNE

If the audience will come to order and give strict attention, we'll forget, for a moment or two, the Shelby of today—Shelby of over 10,000 people...

Yes, there was such a day. Or, at least, the boosters of that day so proclaimed...

Anyways—Remember when the Reverend S. R. Trawick operated the Shelby Seminary...

You older ones may, but for the rest of us it was just one of those things that happened before the war...

But, back to the seminary—John Hoyle, young son of Mr. F. L. Hoyle, has unearthed a bulletin advertisement of the Shelby Seminary of 1874...

One paragraph of the advertisement was given over to an elucidation of several very important reasons why parents should send their girls and boys to the Shelby seminary...

"The mineral springs in the immediate vicinity, the pure mountain air, and Shelby's remoteness from all dissipations and with no inducements for useless extravagance, make Shelby a most desirable educational location..."

Presumably the hack referred to met the Seaboard train at Cherryville or Stubbs.

Then there was a rate list for tuition and board. It ran like this: Spelling, reading and beginning English $10; English studies and Mathematics $15...

Who about Shelby remembers very much about the old seminary? Wonder if there are any of the students of the school now living here?

Fifty-seven years, that isn't such a long time. Surely about the city is some lady who took that $30 piano course and paid $3 for the instrument upon which to practice...

OH, WELL, LIFE SEEMS JUST THAT WAY

It's hard to live up to this colyum. People seem to think that the perpetrator thereof should be an important looking, handsome, dignified personage...

Somehow we'll never forget the pained surprise of Gideon Price, the Lattimore florist, when he learned that the conductor of the colyum was not built on the lines of Jess Willard...

other buildings in keeping with all good little towns. It compared very favorably with my home town, but today there are more school children in Shelby than the entire population of my home town.
