Music Instructor.
 It has been found impossible to arrange a definite guarantee of the salary of Mr. Ovid B. Lewis as music instructor. However, the school board has tendered him the use of instruments owned by the school and the privilege of collecting tuition from citizens who desire to have lessons given their children and are willing to pay for it. It is sincerely hoped that he will return, but it is not yet definitely known.

Less Funds.
 The allotment made by the state board of equalization to the city schools was nineteen percent less than the amount applied for. The sum appropriated the white elementary teacher is five hundred dollars less than the schedule called for after ten percent has been reduced. Only a little over twenty dollars a month was appropriated per building for janitorial service, which is a little less than half the cost. Instructional supplies were cut to approximately one-third.

Clyde Hoey Announces He Will Not Run

iterates his intention to give his services and his time to the party upon all occasions. Howbeit those who rank him as one of the state's most able and popular leaders continue to hope that at some time in the future he will agree to permit the people of the state to repay him with public office for his years of untiring and invaluable service to the party.

Announced candidates for the nomination are Senator Cameron Morrison, incumbent; Robert R. Reynolds, Frank D. Crist, and Tam C. Bowie.

All over the state voters have awaited the Hoey decision and as a result no great amount of interest has been shown so far in the senatorial campaign. Now that Hoey has bowed himself out of the race the voters will likely align themselves with one or another of the announced candidates and the senatorial contest should push its way into the limelight.

Second Chance
 It is the second time that the veteran Shelby campaigner and magnetic speaker, has unselfishly waived a side the opportunity to become a United States senator.

When Senator Lee S. Overman died last winter, December 12, Governor Gardner was deluged with requests to appoint Mr. Hoey but on the morning of the Overman funeral the Shelby man wired the governor that he did not desire to be considered. Then, after declaring that Mr. Hoey could have had the appointment for the asking, Governor Gardner appointed his predecessor, Governor Morrison. Mr. Hoey's friends believed that he might not be adverse to holding the high office but preferred to win it rather than have it given to him. As a result of this conclusion hundreds have believed that he would enter the 1932 contest. From all sections of North Carolina, and from all walks of life, have come letters, telegrams and telephone calls to Mr. Hoey beseeching him to run. Not until Saturday did he announce his intentions and no one could guess them. When he did express himself he made no reference to the barrage of requests for him to run. Yet it is known that on his desk at the time were numerous letters written within the last week offering him support. One letter, it is understood, came from a court official in a distant county in which it was said that 18 of the 19 members of the bar there would support him. Similar letters came from men and women, politicians and professional men in all parts of the state. But once again one of the few men who ever resigned from congress, silently and with heroic calm expressed his appreciation for the proffered support and declined to make the race. His decision brought regret to his home town and county, yet there was a certain feeling of pleasure in it—a silver lining to a dark cloud, so to speak—for few men in any city or community have ever been more popular or more invaluable to their home section than has Mr. Hoey. One minister, upon being informed of the announcement, expressed it very well when he said: "I'd like so much to see him in the senate, but I don't know what on earth we would do without him here."

Negligence.
 Little George, the garage mascot was visiting his aunt. He found the cat in a sunny window purring cheerfully. "Oh, Auntie, come quick," said George, "the cat has gone to sleep and left his engine running."
