The Times Cotton Prices Cotton Bagging And Melon Juice

August Ginning Not So Rare Says Lutz

In a recent issue of The Star there appeared a news item that Robert Biggerstaff ginned a bale of cotton for Reuben McBrayer in August 1881, just fifty years ago. August ginning turns out that it is not so rare as the news item would lead one to believe, says E. H. Lutz of Fallston. Mr. Lutz has been a ginner at Fallston for many years. He is not old enough to go back a half century, but distinctly remembers that in 1925 he ginned five bales at his Fallston gin the last of August that year. Cotton brought 25 cents per pound then.

Says Cotton Crop Was Cheaply Made

"I expect money to be more plentiful and the farmers to come out better than they anticipate this fall," said an observant citizen yesterday. "This cotton crop has been cheaply made. It cost at least 40 per cent less to make than last year's crop. An actual check-up shows that acreage was reduced 17 per cent and fertilizer 26 per cent, so if we make as much cotton on 17 per cent less acreage and 26 per cent less fertilizer, the crop has been made for 40 percent less cost than last year. Then we have cheaper labor to throw in for good measure. And with a bountiful harvest of food for man and feed for beast, there will be no money outlay for these. Don't you think it much better to have empty pockets than empty stomachs. Suppose we had had a drought, a flood or a tornado and had full pockets but empty stomachs" the business man concluded.

What Will The Price Of Ginning Be Now?

Farmers are asking the question, what will the ginners charge this fall? Last year there was an effort on the part of ginners to establish a standard price the county over, but this did not hold long. A half dozen prices prevailed in different sections. One ginner says his price will be $2.50, another says $3 per bale. Bagging and ties cost about 75c per set, so this leaves the ginner about $1.75 for his work. Some ginners say they cannot operate for less. Most of them will carry both jute and cotton bagging and wrap the farmer's cotton in his choice. The cotton bagging, however, costs about 15c per unit more than jute. It is learned.

Ginners Have Cotton And Jute Bagging

Toy B. Webb who operates a gin a few miles west of Shelby is said to be the first ginner to have cotton bagging in which to wrap cotton in this fall. It is learned that all ginners will have both jute, but some ginners will make no difference in the price. Jute bagging weighs about 11 pounds per unit, cotton bagging about 4 1-2 pounds. Ties weigh 9 lbs. But what about the tare? With cotton bagging 7 pounds lighter than jute, will the buyers allow the old standard tare? Many mills say they will, but one ginner says Anderson and Clayton, one of the largest cotton buying firms in the South has not expressed themselves on this important question.

Spindale Merchant To Pay A Premium

Spindale, Sept. 3.—J. A. McCraw, merchant of this place who does a large time business among farmers, says he will accept cotton on account, allowing one and a half cents above the market on the day the cotton is offered. In this way he hopes to get his time accounts settled up and aid the farmer in meeting all obligations so his credit will be in good standing for next year.

That Watermelon Juice Controversy

Webster Whisnant of Cleveland county writes The Star: "You carried a notice that Jule Brackett had made syrup from the juice of the watermelon. Then Mr. Wheeler of Hickory goes back 30 to 35 years when a relative of his in South Carolina made some of the same kind of syrup. I can go Mr. Wheeler one better. In Rutherford county there lived Albert Melton, a near neighbor of my father in the Golden Valley section. He made syrup out of Watermelon juice as an experiment and I ate some of it and liked it. My wife made some about that time, 40 years ago."

Hoover Overlooks Wine, Beer Unity

Ohio Congressman Asks President If He Would Sign Bill Legalizing Sale.

Washington.—Representative Arthur P. Lamneck, new Ohio Democratic congressman, said President Hoover had not answered a letter written him three weeks ago on the subject of prohibition.

"On August 7, I wrote President Hoover asking if he would sign a bill legalizing the manufacture and sale of light wines and beer if such a measure were enacted by congress, but so far I have received no answer," Lamneck said.

Lamneck, who ran on a wet platform in the district which includes Westerville, home of the anti-saloon league, defeated John C. Speaks, Republican dry, by more than 15,000 votes.
