Plane Without Tail Shown In Germany

Berlin.—An airplane without a tail, designed by Captain Hermann Koehl, transatlantic flier, has been demonstrated before representatives of the ministry of transportation.

It has a wingspread of only 45 feet and is driven by a 28-horsepower motor. Its sponsors claim it has shown such remarkable flying qualities that it may prove to be a turning point in airplane construction.

Well, it's about time for the prosperity boys to begin telling us better times are around the corner. Farmers who want to receive attention from politicians should follow the example of labor and organize.
