

Dr. Carroll Speaks At Battleground Meeting

Cleveland Native Pays Tribute To Col. Hambright At Unveiling Of Marker.

(Ray Erwin in Charlotte Observer.) Kings Mountain Battleground, S. C., Oct. 9.—Upon the craggy crest of this historic hill, where 131 years ago today a small band of backwoods pioneers wrested control from the British forces and assured ultimate victory for the colonies, Wednesday afternoon gathered a representative company of descendants of the battle's heroes to commemorate the anniversary of the skirmish that marked the turning point of the American Revolution.

Dedication of a marker to the memory of Col. Frederick Hambright, a leader of the American troops in the Battle of Kings Mountain, was the feature of the observance of the anniversary. The marker was erected by Col. Frederick Hambright chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution at Kings Mountain.

Dr. Delia Dixon Carroll of Raleigh, prominent lecturer, woman physician and member of the famous Dixon family of Cleveland county, delivered the principal address at the celebration, which was attended by several hundred people.

Inspired Yankees.
The Battle of Kings Mountain taught the Yankees how to fight and that victory encouraged George Washington and the army of Virginia to really keep at the task of defeating the British," asserted Dr. Dixon, who is a great-granddaughter of Colonel Hambright. "The people of this section would never have given up to the British crown."

Dr. Dixon traced the life of her distinguished ancestor, who was born in Germany, came to America at the age of 11 years, lived in Pennsylvania and finally migrated to Lincoln county, North Carolina. She explained his love of hunting and his devotion to liberty.

"In his wildest dreams, Colonel Hambright had no idea of what 'prohibition' means and he had no intimation that a Volstead act would ever be passed in this country," declared Dr. Dixon. "He little dreamed that laws would require men to send their children to school and further hedge them in. Today, his ashes would turn in the grave if he knew that a woman was here representing him."

"Although he was sent to congress, he was not a man to push himself forward. If he was alive today, I do not think he would be running with the other eight for governor. Rather would he sit on his porch and wait for committees of citizens to call upon him for his help and advice. He was a patriot and not a politician, and he represented his state with efficiency both on the battlefield and in the parliamentary halls."

In discussing the fact that people like to claim descent from men like Colonel Hambright but forget the horse thieves and others in their ancestry not renowned, Dr. Carroll quoted her brother, Dr. Thomas Dixon, author of "The Clansmen" from which the picture, "The Birth of a Nation," was made, as having said: "You cannot possibly control ancestry, but you can be a fine ancestor for the coming generation."

The speaker also lauded the early Carolina settlers for their lack of religious persecution, saying that they were not the "witch-burners" that came over on the Mayflower. "It was not the George Washingtons, the Thomas Jeffersons nor the Alexander Hamiltons that laid the foundations of this republic, but mountain pioneers like Frederick Hambright," exclaimed the speaker. "It was this brave band of people like the Hambrights who settled the wilds and made the country habitable."

"But America is not finished and North Carolina is not a finished state. The last legislature showed that there remains lot to do. Are we as citizens to sit down and allow the politicians to take the reins and tell us what to do, dividing the funds of the treasury to give small politicians jobs, while we work our fingers off to pay taxes?"

"I have been around the world twice, but the mountains of western North Carolina are nearer heaven, reach higher, look greener, than any other in the world. We have a beautiful coastline. With our highways and schools and the right sort of government, North Carolina could be developed into the playground of America."

"Our roads are good, so now let us make them equally beautiful by planting roses, crepe myrtle, red bud and dogwood on the borders of them."

Jackson Cooper, state regent, regretting their inability to be present.—A chorus of 100 voices from Kings Mountain high school sang. The devotions were conducted by Rev. J. R. Church, pastor of the Kings Mountain Methodist church.

Marker Unveiled.
As the October sun began to sink behind the crest of the mountain peak, the group moved down the hill to the spot where Colonel Hambright was badly wounded in the battle, where the marker had been erected. Virginia Summers and James E. Herndon, Jr. dressed in colonial costumes, unveiled the marker, a handsome bronze plate on a large stone base. The plate was set in a rock taken from the chimney of the Hambright home. Ernest and Miles Mauney, small twins were flagbearers. The quartet of children are all great-great-great grand children of the Revolutionary leader.

A poem paying tribute to Colonel Hambright, written by Mrs. Helen Hay, was read by Mrs. Paul Neisler. Mrs. O. B. Carpenter presented the marker, which was accepted by Miss Lessie D. Witherspoon of York, S. C., president of the Kings Mountain Battleground association, owners of the battlefield. Miss Witherspoon accepted the custodianship of the marker until the federal government takes the property over for the new Kings Mountain National Military park. Boy Scout Bobby Baker sounded bugle "taps."

As a grand finale to the day's simple exercises, which were in marked contrast to the elaborate programs at last year's sesqui-centennial celebration when President Hoover delivered the address, was reached when Henry McWhorter of Union county fired a musket used by Edwin Richardson, great-grandfather of Mr. McWhorter, and a soldier under Colonel Hambright in the Kings Mountain battle.
