

Nobody's Business

By GEE MCGEE

A Trip By Train.

I rode on a real choo-choo train the other day. It was a long choo-choo train and it had an engine and 2 express cars and 1 mail car and 4 or 5 coaches and Pullman cars. There was another man on this train, in my car, and he and I had a hard time trying to sit in all of those 34 double seats.

I tried to figure out why folks had quit riding on choo-choo trains, and finally decided that it was the dust for one thing, and a choo-choo train is too slow for the other thing. Folks are in a hurry—that's why they have to use Ford's anso-forth. Our train had a conductor and a news-butcher and everything. Why, it was just like the trains we rode on before automobiles were sold on credit—velvet seats—windows that you couldn't raise and doors at both ends.

We stopped at a station and an old woman got on. Man, she was certainly cussing out the buses. She said—"That trifling old bus driver wouldn't wait for me to run back to the house to get my specks, and he didn't wait to carry my 2 boxes of stuff I was taking to my married darter, so I just up and says—you can keep your old bus, if you want to—I am a-going to Dora's on the train, and here I am. Mr. Conductor, your train is powerful stuffy—is this as fast as you can go?"

I talked to the train crew a right smart. The flagman said his train had 8 or 9 passengers one day last week—when the boys and girls were going back to college. I asked him if the road had cut his wages, and he said—"No, they got more sense than to start that kind of racket. Us railroad boys is organized." He intimated that it was not his fault that the railroads were not making any money.

The conductor was a nice old fellow. He wore a pretty cap, brown mustash, white eye-brows, a blue suit, and a celluloid collar. I envied that celluloid collar, as it did not sweat down like other collars do. He was not very kind to the laundrymen though. He said his wages were the same as they were fixed by McAdoo. He thought it would be fine to elect McAdoo president, as they might get another raise. He informed me that about 20 of the conductors his road had turned off had gone into the chicken business.

I don't know what is to become of our railroads. They can't cut rates and compete with the new order of things. They are "dare-some" to reduce wages of their employees. They are no longer able to give good service, except on car-load shipments. They can't get the legislatures on in congress to outlaw the trucks and buses. They don't seem to want to get out of the old rut of doing "like they have always done." They are simply up to their necks in trouble, and the government doesn't care to go back into the railroad business, but might.

How Mothers Have Changed.

Thirty years ago, nearly everybody worked, including brothers and sisters, but our mothers did more work than anybody else. The 1890 model mother's working schedule was about as follows:
5:00 a. m.—Got up.
5:15 a. m.—Cooked breakfast.
5:45 a. m.—Washed the dishes.
6:30 a. m.—Cleaned up the house.
6:30 a. m.—Prepared the children's school lunches.
7:00 a. m.—Made up all the beds.
7:30 a. m.—Fed the chickens.
8:00 a. m.—Got the children off to school.
8:30 a. m.—Began on the family wash.
10:30 a. m.—Gathered vegetables for dinner.
11:00 a. m.—Cooked dinner.
12:00 a. m.—Served dinner.
12:30 p. m.—Washed the dishes.
1:00 p. m.—Began to make the children some clothes.
2:00 p. m.—Took up darning and patching job.
3:00 p. m.—Ironed the day's washing.
5:00 p. m.—Worked in the garden.
6:00 p. m.—Cooked supper.
6:30 p. m.—Washed the dishes.
8:30 p. m.—Put the children to bed.
9:00 p. m.—Knitted.
10:00 p. m.—Said her prayers and went to bed. (Good night.)

But it is slightly different with our modern mothers. Not all of them, and possibly on a few of them (and they don't live down south) run on the following schedule:
8:45 a. m.—The cook cooks breakfast.
8:58 a. m.—The cook takes her breakfast to her.
9:15 a. m.—She eats her breakfast in bed.
9:30 a. m.—She slaps little Willie for waking her up.
9:50 a. m.—She gets up, dons ki-

mono.
10:00 a. m.—The servant cleans up the house.
11:00 a. m.—She goes to a bridge party.
2:00 a. m.—The cook serves lunch for hubby.
5:00 p. m.—She takes a nap.
7:00 p. m.—The cook serves dinner.
7:30 p. m.—She goes out.
11:00 p. m.—She comes in frequently. (Good morning.)

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

Whereas, it hath pleased our Heavenly Father to take unto himself our brother, J. M. Wilson.
Be it resolved by the Lawndale lodge number 486 A. F. and A. M. in regular meeting assembled: That this lodge has lost a member, real and loyal to the tenets of Free Masonry and that while we grieve with his family in their loss and ours, we humbly submit to Him that doeth all things well, realizing that our loss is Brother Wilson's eternal gain.
That not only has the family lost a kind father and a devoted husband but that the community has lost a wise leader and his church a life devoted to the establishment of God's kingdom on earth; and
Be it further resolved: That the sincerest sympathy of the members of this lodge be tendered to the saddened members of the bereaved family; and
Be it finally resolved: That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of this meeting, that a copy be sent to the family, and that a copy be sent to The Cleveland Star for publication.

Seized as Baby Killers

Don't Touch Electrical Fixtures While Bathing

One-third of All Accidents from Electric Shock Occur in the Bathroom, Writes Dr. Copeland, Urging Especial Care With Appliances

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D. United States Senator from New York. Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

IT is almost a daily experience to read of a sudden death, perhaps of one who has been electrocuted in the bathtub. The number of deaths from electricity every year runs well up into the thousands in North America.
A committee created by the American Society of Safety Engineers has been organized to study this problem. These men have carefully investigated the cases that have been reported. They found that out of one hundred such accidents, thirty-one occurred in the bath room.
Most of these occurred when the individual, whose body was wet, attempted to turn on an electric light. In this way he received an electric shock. Usually the power was 110 volts, but in many cases an even lower voltage was sufficient to cause instantaneous death.
Standing in water, the victim reaches for an electric switch or fixture. As a result of some defect, the contact made is sufficient to send the current through the body.
The electric current has such intensity as to shock the heart, so that its muscles are damaged. The muscles of the heart are sent into rapid vibration, preventing that
