

Around Our TOWN OR Shelby SIDELIGHTS

FAMOUS OLD STREET LOSING ITS LEADERS

Death and the changes wrought by the steady procession of years have laid a heavy hand upon Shelby's stately old South Washington street.

For one decade after another the tree-lined avenue, running south from the court square, was Shelby's most exclusive residential section.

But South Washington is changing. Gaudy gas stations haven't interrupted its quietude and passing years add more beauty to its dignity.

Of more recent weeks slow-moving funeral corteges seem to have been making regular drives along that street beneath the boughs of the overlapping trees.

A new generation, of course, is carrying on. It is always that way. Juniors are playing along the old street and grandsons, too.

In a few more years, retracing to the list above, and the last of the men who helped build South Washington will be no more.

And through it all, the never-ending alterations of hour hands that never, never stop.

HEATS HIS WATER BY THE SUN

El Nido, the Spanish home of Dr. and Mrs. E. W. Gibbs on West Marion street, is one of the city's outstanding residences.

To the far South, in Mexico, near the American border, where the early Spanish pioneers and priests first settled.

On the top of the Gibbs' El Nido here is a 120-gallon water tank. Running into it, and away to the bathroom, is a fine copper coil.

Thus, El Nido has hot water the year around, one of the most cheering of modern comforts, without a single iota of additional expense to provide it.

HOW THEY STARTED THOSE NAMES

Some time ago this corner wondered how C. R. Hoey, Jr., came to get the nickname "Cigar."

Those who look at him today also wonder how a certain Shelby druggist picked up the monicker "Bones."

Negro Supervisors In Great Meeting

Fifteen Southern States And Foreign Countries. White Leaders Gather With Them.

On Monday, October 19 and continuing through October 26, a conference of Negro Jeanes workers from all the southern states was held at Tuskegee Institute, Alabama.

The purpose of the conference was three-fold, namely: to pay homage and respect to the retiring president of the Jeanes fund, James H. Dillard, to welcome his successor, Arthur D. Wright, and to have these two great leaders speak to their agents in a group.

Through general sessions and group conferences most helpful and inspiring encouragement was given the Jeanes workers whose task it is to get into the life of rural people and help in building up more wholesome and intelligent attitudes towards conditions affecting happy and useful living.

Representatives from some of the leading universities and colleges of the north and south were present along also with representatives from Australia, New Mexico, West, East and South Africa and Canada.

The Jeanes worker of Cleveland county, V. O. Thomas, as the supervisor of Negro rural schools was happy to represent Cleveland county and to express to the southern workers the fine spirit of cooperation on behalf of the superintendent, boards and white and colored citizens of Cleveland county in making this county one of the ranking counties in N. C. in everything that tends towards progressive and useful living.

What most rural communities need is a better social life, but the trouble is that too many of the best people are deserting their farms for the towns and cities, leaving the rural community to fight it out as best it can.

Morrison Derides Contest Of Bailey

Pritchard's Fight On Democratic Senator Termed Dirty Politics.

Raleigh, Oct. 28.—Senator Cameron Morrison Monday night characterized the present attempt to unseat Senator Josiah William Bailey, elected to succeed Senator F. M. Simmons in the United States senate from North Carolina "one of the most insolent pieces of dirty politics ever propagated in North Carolina."

North Carolina's senior senator by virtue of his appointment to succeed the late Lee S. Overman before Senator Simmons retired from office in favor of Bailey was one of the speakers at a farewell dinner here given by the "home folks" in honor of Senator Bailey.

Senator Morrison predicted the fight to oust Bailey from his seat on charges of election irregularities "would not amount to anything but to the discredit of those who proposed it."

Bailey was elected in the last general election, defeating George M. Pritchard, Republican of Asheville, by a 100,000 majority.
