Boom-boom Voice Of Morrison Gets Notice In Senate

(By Charles P. Stewart.)

Washington—Tourists in the capitol corridors turn and look back and, "What senator is that?" they ask their guide breathlessly, as they Cameron Morrison of North Carolina.

They know instinctively that he is no common person, nor even a mere representative.

About a quarter of a cubic added to his stature would enhance Senator Morrison's dignity somewhat, but as far as he goes he certainly makes the most of himself.

Frock coated, slouch hatted, 50 erect he leans backward, he navigates with what would be a swagger in ordinary individual, but is a stately stride, of course, in a member of the upper house of congress.

It is when he makes a speech, however (especially from a platform, for the truth is he is not quite tall enough to appear to maximum advantage on a dead level that Senator Morrison is at his most impressive.

First he tosses his hair—longish and silvery. Then he looks up at the gallery, if there is one; where it should be, if there isn't. Next he lifts one hand aloft, palm forward. Finally he opens his mouth and out pours a deep, mellow rumble, which swells and swells into a prolonged "O-o-o-o-h," continuing for 30 seconds or thereabouts—and subsides and swells again and subsides, and so on indefinitely. It's musical and harmonious. The senator gesticulates an accompaniment and occasionally one catches a word or two as a gas puffer now and then bursts out a pebble or a fragrant of shale, but mainly it is just that deep-toned roar.

It's wonderful.

Less Millionaires In Country Today

Ann Arbor, Mich., News.

Millionaires have been reduced substantially in number during the last two years. That is one of the stories told by preliminary figures on the income-tax returns. The number of Americans with incomes above half a million was reduced from 1471 to 460. The million-dollar incomes dropped from 504 to 149. But it is not really a pessimistic tale that these figures tell.

The economic slump has served to redistribute this wealth in some degree, and that is an optimistic portent. Concentrated wealth does not make for circulation of money, and circulation is what the nation needs most at present.

Not It Married.

Child: Daddy, when I am grown up can I do what I like?

Father: No my son—not if you get married.
